THE OLD PLANTERS AT SALEM.

An address by the Vice-President, Frank A. Gardner, M. D., delivered before the Old Planters' Society, at the annual meeting, March 27, 1901.

[By vote of the Council of the Society, ordered printed in The Genealogical Quarterly Magazine.]

Members of the Old Planters' Society and Friends: The first address before this society was delivered by our honored President, and the subject which he presented so satisfactorily for our consideration, was the alliance between Pilgrim and Puritan in Massachusetts.

It seems appropriate that I should present today the records of another alliance of those early days: that of the old planters and the men who came with Endicott and Higginson and Skelton.

We find in the early letters and histories many allusions to disagreements between these parties in the first years of the settlement at Naumkeag, and to the final adjustment of these differences, but no attempt has been made previously, to the speaker's knowledge, to collect these threads of history

THE OLD PLANTERS AT SALER.

An address by the Vice-President, Frack A. Gardner, M. D., delivered before the Old Planters' Society, at the round meeting, March 20, 1901

[By vote of the Council of the Society, ordered printed in The Gravitanical Contents Managers.]

Members of the Old Planter' Society and Friends. The first address before this society was delivered by our humand Fresident, and the subject which he presented so satisfactorily for our consideration, was the alliance herween Pilgrim and Puritan in Massachusetts.

It seems appropriate that I should present today the records of another alliance of those early days: that of the old planters and the men who came with Endicott and Higgsbasen and Shelton

We find in the early lotters and histopres many allustons to disagreements between these parties in the first years of the settlement at Naumkeag, and to the final advanteem of these differences, but no aremost has been made previously, to the speaker's knowledge, to collect these threads of history and weave them into a connected story. As we stated in the first publication of this society, justice has not been done these early pioneers, and the main cause for the existence of this society is to uncover and publish the history of those early days. The desire of the speaker this afternoon is to present a brief review of the work and influence of a definite group of men, namely, the Cape Ann Planters, in an equally definite enterprise,—the founding of Salem. We especially desire to consider the relations of the old planters to the men who came in 1628 and 1629, and review their controversies and disagreements, up to their final organic union in the latter year.

The first planters came to Cape Ann for the purpose of starting a commercial enterprise, with the hope of financial gain. By providing a place where the fishermen might winter and be ready for the spring catch, they hoped to be able to return to England and Spain in time to sell their fish to advantage. They were not dominated by sentiment or religious enthusiasm, but on the contrary were practical men, endeavoring to improve their worldly condition.

While this was their prime object in coming, we would be doing them an injustice if we did not state that they were men of strong principles, and thoroughly in favor of Christian observances. One of the prime movers in the enterprise, the Reverend John White, evidently desired to make the settlement a place of refuge for Puritans who were deprived of their rights in England, and we know that the Rev. Mr. Lyford went to the Cape Ann settlement in 1625 with Roger Conant. We have proof that the men in the fishing settlements further east considered the men of Massachusetts Bay as favoring religious observances for we read in Mather's "Magnalia"* that, "There were more than a few attempts of the English to people and improve the parts of New England which were to the northward of New Plimouth. But the designs of those attempts being aimed no higher than the advancement of some worldly interest, a constant series of disasters has confounded them, until there was a plantation erected upon the nobler designs of Christianity; and that plantation, though it has had more adversaries than perhaps any one upon earth, yet, having obtained help from God, it continues to this day. There have been very fine settlements in the northeast regions: but what has become of them? I have heard that one of our ministers once preaching to a congregation there, urged them to approve themselves a religious people from this consideration, that otherwise they would contradict the main end of planting this wilderness. Whereupon a well-known person then in the assembly, cried out, 'Sir, you are mistaken, you think you are preaching to the people at the Bay; our main end was to catch fish." * Mather also speaks of "that more pious colony at the bay." † These planters were most of them Godfearing men, with views similar to those ascribed to Roger Conant by Reverend William Hubbard. In his history of New England, he says of Conant, "secretly conceiving in his mind, that in the following times (as since is fallen out) it might prove a receptacle for such as upon the account of religion would be willing to begin a foreign plantation in this part of the world, of which he gave some intimation to his friends in England. Whereupon that reverend person Mr. White (under God one of the chief founders of the Massachusetts Colony in New England) being grieved in his spirit that so good a work should be suffered to fall to the ground by the adventurers thus abruptly breaking off, did write to Mr. Conant not to desert his business; faithfully promising, that if himself with three others (whom he knew to be honest and prudent men), viz. John Woodberry, John Balch, and Peter Palfreys, employed by the adventurers would stay at Naumkeag, and give timely notice thereof, he would provide a patent for them, and likewise send them whatever they should write for, either men or provisions, or goods wherewith to trade with the Indians. Answer was returned that they would all stay on those terms, entreating that they might be encouraged accordingly; yet it seems, before they received any return according to their desires, the three last mentioned began to recoil, and repenting of their engagement to stay at Naumkeag, for fear of the Indians, and the other inconveniences, resolved rather to go to Virginia, especially because Mr. Lyford, their minister, upon a loving invitation, was thither bound. But Mr. Conant, as one inspired by some superior instinct, though never so earnestly pressed to go along with them, peremptorily declared his mind to wait the providence of God in that place, where now they were, yea, though all the rest forsook him; not doubting, as he said, but if they departed he should soon have more company. The other three, observing his confident resolution, at last concurred with him, and soon after sent back John Woodbury for England, to procure necessaries for a plantation. But that God, who is ready to answer his people before they call, as he had filled the heart of that good man, Mr. Conant, in New England with courage and resolution to abide fixed in his purpose, notwithstanding all opposition and persuasion he met with to the contrary, had also inclined the hearts of several others in England about the same design."* From the above, and from the quotation taken from his petition to the General Court, published in the first pamphlet issued by this society, we see that the final success of this settlement was very largely due to the courage of Roger Conant.

Much uncertainty exists concerning the landing place of these planters when they arrived at Salem. Some contend that the sloping ledge on the north side of the Salem end of Beverly bridge, is the place of landing, but the burden of proof seems, in the mind of the speaker, to be in favor of some locality on the South River, not far from the foot of Elm Street. The houses which they erected were certainly much nearer this latter point, and a description of the locality by William Wood in his "New England Prospect,"* favors the latter location. He says of Salem, it "stands on the middle of a neck of land very pleasantly, having a south river on the one side, and a north river on the other side," and speaks of most of the houses as standing on this neck.

The planter's marsh was undoubtedly in that neck of land between the North River and Collin's Cove, but we have no record that any of the planters built houses in this locality, and we know that the houses of many of them stood near the present center of the city. These old planters had granted to them in 1635-6, extensive farm lands in recognition of their services to the colony: 1000 acres were assigned to John Balch, Roger Conant, Peter Palfrey, William Trask, and John Woodbury, in equal parts of 200 acres each. This land was around the headwaters of Bass River in what is now Beverly, and extended from Bass River to and around the "great pond" or Wenham Lake.

Others of the old planters had land granted to them in different localities, as we shall see.

John Balch, in 1638, built his house on what is now Cabot St., Beverly, near the Boston and Maine Railroad crossing.

Roger Conant, at a later date, erected a house for himself in the neighborhood upon the opposite side of the street. His first house, which was the first one erected in Salem, was on the north side of Essex Street not far from Washington Street.

Captain William Trask lived on what is now Boston Street a short distance east of the old burying ground near the Peabody line. His mill was on Gardner's Brook in the rear of the Trask house. The grounds at present used by the Essex Agricultural Society were granted to him as an orchard.

Thomas Gardner, in 1641, had a house on what is now Essex Street about midway between the present Public Library and Flint Street. His farm grant of 100 acres was on what is now Lowell Street in Peabody, near the Needham farm, and the swamp which is crossed by the Newburyport turnpike near the depot at West Peabody Junction has been known even in recent

These old planters had granted to them in 1655-6, extensive farm lands in recognition of their services to the colony: 1000 series were assigned to John Balch, Roger Conant, Peter Palfrey, William Trask, and John Wondhury, in equal parts of 200 acres each. This land was around the headwasters of Barts of 300 acres cach. This land was around the headwasters of Barts River to and around the "great noud" on Wentum 1 alex.

Others of the old planters had land granted to them in different localities, as we shall see

John Balch, in 1638, built his house on what is now Cahot St., Beverly, near the Boston and Maine Railroad consume.

Rager Consus, at a later date, exected a house for himself in the neighborhood upon the opposite side of the street. His first boase, which was the first one exected in Salem, was on the north side of Essex Street not far from Washington Street.

Captain William Trast lived on what is now Boston Street a short distance east of the old burging ground near the Peabody short. His mill was on Gardner's Brook in the rear of the Trask house. The grounds at present and by the Essex Agricultural Society were granted to him as an orchard.

Themat Gardiner, in 1641, had a house on what is now Essex Street about midway between the present Public Library and Flint Street. His farm grant of 100 acres was on what is now Lowell Street in Peabody, near the Needham tarm, and the swamp which is crossed by the Newburyport turnpike near the depot at West Peabody Junction has been known even in recent years as Gardner's swamp. The old farm house remained standing until October, 1854, when it was burned, having been set on fire by a disaffected farm hand. His homestead lot was in Peabody, and the house stood on the present corner of Central and Elm Streets. This was granted to him in 1643.

William Allen lived on what is now Essex Street, on the western corner of Elm Street.

Walter Price had a house on the northeast corner of Essex and Washington Streets, where Mr. Luscomb's drug store stands. John Woodberry occupied the lot next east of this.

Peter Palfrey lived on the present site of the Essex House until 1652, when he removed to Wakefield, where he lived near the present station of the Salem Branch in Wakefield, near Smith's Pond.

William Jeffery, another of the old planters at Cape Ann, lived at Jeffery's Creek, now Manchester by the Sea, and afterward went to Newport, R. I., where he died in 1675, aged 84.

Richard Norman had his house at the foot of Norman's Rocks at the head of Essex Street. His son Richard lived at Marblehead.

The Old Planters' House, which was first erected at Cape Ann, and afterwards moved to Salem, must of necessity claim some of our attention this afternoon. Felt says: "After Roger Conant and others had houses erected at Naumkeag, Governor Endicott ordered the materials of another at Cape Ann, to be brought hither in 1628, and rebuilded for his own abode. This mansion so transferred was prevailingly of the model in England first called Tudor, and afterwards the Elizabethan, which was essentially Gothic." This house was mentioned by Rev. Francis Higginson when he came in 1629, as "a faire house newly built for the Governour."

Richard Brackenbury, of Beverly, many years later testified that he "came to Salem with Governour Endicott; that he found here old Goodman Norman and son, William Allen, Walter Knight and others; that these persons stated, that they came over years as Gardner's swamp. The old farm house remained standing until October, 1854, when it was burned, having been see on fire by a disalisered farm hand. His homestead lot was in Peabody, and the house stood on the present corner of Central and Elm Streets. This was granted to him in 1643.

John Woodherry occupied the lot next east of this.

Paser Palfry lived on the present site of the Essex House until 1652, when he removed to Wakefield, where he lived near the present station of the Salem Branch in Wakefield, near Smith's Pond.

William Jeffery, smother of the old planters at Cape Ann, lived at Jeffery's Ureek, now Manchester by the Sea, and afterward went to Mewport, E. I., where he died in 1675, aged 84-

Richard Brackenbury, of Beverly, many years later testified that he "came to Salem with Government Endrott; that he found here old Goodman Norman and son, William Allen, Walter Enight and athors; that these persons stated, that they came over to Cape Ann for the Dorchester Company; that they and Roger Conant, J. Woodbury, P. Palfrey, J. Balch, and others, had erected houses at Salem; that he was informed that the Dorchester Company had sold their right to the Massachusetts Company before Mr. Endicott came over; that Mr. Endicott when he arrived hither, took possession of Cape Ann, and in the course of the year had the houses built there pulled down for his own use, and also took possession of Cape Ann side (Beverly) and soon after laid out lots for tillage there." In 1680, this same Richard Brackenbury in a deposition, mentions the house at Cape Ann, which he says he "assisted in taking down and reconstructing at Salem for Governor Endicott's use. It is believed by many that the frame of this house still exists in the wooden block on the northeast corner of Washington and Church Streets in Salem.

Governor Endicott's house originally stood nearer the present corner of Federal and Washington Streets, but in the list of cottage rights no house was mentioned on the site of the Buffum Block above referred to. Later, however, the Governor's lot was vacant, while the house occupied by Mr. Epps, the schoolmaster, stood on the lot on which the supposed timbers of the old house still stand, on the corner of Church and Washington Streets.

Mr. William P. Upham tells me that he believes that when Mr. Epps, who was related to the Endicotts, acquired this lot of land, he had the house removed to the site referred to, and that these old timbers are, therefore, a part of the original Planters' House.*

He was deeply interested in this matter, and had the opportunity of viewing the old house when the outside covering was removed. The receding walls of the second and lower stories were plainly shown, and the peaks and gables on the ends were very fantastically decorated, showing that the house was of more than ordinary importance. In fact, such a house as might have been erected for the Governor.

The statement made by Thomas Maule, arraigning Governor Endicott, in his "Truth Set Forth and Maintained," that "one can hardly find where his fair dwelling in Salem stood," might apply to the building being removed, quite as well as to its destruction.

Having briefly considered the old planters separately and carefully reviewed the evidences concerning the so-called Old Planters' House, we turn our attention to some of the dangers and trials which beset them in their new home at Naumkeag. When we think how numerous and great these dangers were, we can wonder but little that so many turned back to their old English home. Sickness wrought sad havoc, and over eighty died in the winter of 1629.*

From the records of the Court of Assistants, held in London, March 5, 1629, we learn that an attempt was made to induce a surgeon to sail for Salem: "A proposicon beeing made to intertayne a surgeon for the plantacon, Mr. (John) Pratt was propounded as an abell man vppon theis condicons, namely, That 40 pounds should bee allowed him, viz—for his chist 25 pounds, the rest for his own sallery for the first yeere, prouided he continue 3 yeeres, the Companie to bee at charge of transporting his wiffe and (servant), haue 20 pounds a yeere for the other 2 yeeres, and to build him a howse at the Companie's chardge and the danger from the Indians was great. The tribes hereabout were at war with each other, and it was only by kind treatment accorded by the settlers to the Agawams, and assistance rendered them against their enemies, that their position was made tenable at all.

The planters were careful in their dealings with the red men to avoid all danger of offending them, and the authorities of the Massachusetts Bay Company in their first letter of instruction to Governor Endicott, wrote, "above all we pray you be careful that there be none in our precincts permitted to do any injury in the least kind, to the heathen people; and if any offend in that way, let them receive due correction." *

William Dixy, who came in 1629, in a deposition dated Feb. 16, 1681, stated: "Before we came to dwell here, the Indians bid us welcome, and showed themselves very glad that we came to dwell among them, and understood that they had kindly entertained the English that came over before we came, and the English and Indians had a field together, and the Indians fled to shelter themselves under the English often times, saying they were afraid of their Indian enemy in the country. I remember sometime after we arrived the Agawam Indians complained to Mr. Endicott that they were afraid of the Tarrentines, and Hugh Brown with others were sent in a boat to Agawam for the Indians relief, and at other times we gave our neighbor Indians protection from their enemies." †

Humphrey Woodbury in a deposition of the same date, stated that "The Indians were glad of the colonists company, planted by them, and came to them for protection against their Indian enemy up country, and we did shelter them when they fled, and we did have their free leave to build and plant, where we had taken up their lands; the same year or next after we came to Salem, we cut hay for cattle, which we brought over on the Beverly side and have had possession of Beverly side ever since." ‡

These depositions, made when the heirs of John Mason were endeavoring to prove their claim to all the territory between the Merrimack and the North River, show how careful Conant was to go beyond the territory which had been granted to John Mason, and at the same time proves that he had been wise enough to obtain a title from the Indians, in return for services rendered.

We learn also from these depositions, and from the published works of Rev. Francis Higginson and William Wood, quotations from which were given in the first publication of this society, that the planters began to till the soil as soon as possible after arrival. They were dependent for food largely upon what they could raise, and the attempts in this line at Cape Ann had been unsuccessful. Wood records that they fertilized the soil with fish and raised corn.

The matter of enriching the soil is frequently mentioned, and at a meeting of the Court of Assistants, held May 21, 1629, the court ordered that "each person be permitted to seat himself and build his house in a convenient place not formerly built (upon) nor manured."*

With such good success did they till the soil, that Thomas Graves who came in 1629, wrote back to England, as follows: "The increase of corn is here far beyond expectation, as I have seen here by experience in barley, the which because it is so much above your conception, I will not mention." They did not, however, confine themselves to the food necessities, but raised tobacco for their solace, and thereby incurred the displeasure of Governor Endicott.

The idea of raising tobacco had been considered by some even as early as 1624, for Winslow in "Good Newes," wrote "Tobacco may there be planted, but not with that profit as in some other places; neither were it profitable there to follow it though the increase were equal, because fish is a better and richer commodity, to be had in equal abundance." †

Thursden's "Landing at Cape Anne," pr 50-

In the first general letter of the Massachusetts Bay Company to Governor Endicott, dated Gravesend, April 17, 1629, he was instructed as follows: "And as touching the old planters, their earnest desire for the present to continue the planting of tobacco (a trade by this whole Company generally disavowed, and utterly disclaimed by some of the greatest adventurers amongst us, who absolutely declared themselves unwilling to have any hand in this Plantation if we intended to cherish or permit the plantation thereof, or any other kind, than for a man's private use, for mere necessity) we are of the opinion the old planters will have small encouragement to that employment; for we find here, by late experience, that it doth hardly produce the freight and custom; neither is there hope of amendment, there being such quantities made in other place, that ere long it is like to be of little worth. Nevertheless, if the old planters (for we exclude all others), conceive that they cannot provide for their livelihood, we leave it to the discretion of yourself and Council there, to give way for the present to the planting of it in such manner and with such restrictions as you and said Council shall think fitting; having an especial care, with as much conveniency as may be, utterly to suppress the planting of it except for mere necessity. But, however, we absolutely forbid the sale of it, by any of our own or particular men's servants, unless upon urgent occasion, for the benefit of health and taken privately." In the second letter they wrote: "As in our former, so now again we especially desire you to take care that no tobacco be planted by any of the new planters under your government, unless it be some small quantity for mere necessity, and for physic, for the preservation of their health; and that the same to be taken privately by ancient men, and none other; and to make a general restraint thereof, as much as in you is, by persuading the old planters to employ themselves in other business, according to our example, and not to permit that any tobacco be laden there upon our ships."

Governor Craddock in his letter to Capt. Endicott, dated Feb. 16, 1629, wrote: "The course you have taken in giving to Governor Endicott, dated Gravesend, April 17, 1620, he was Governor Cradiock in his letter to Capt. Endicott, deted Feb. 16, 1629, wrote: "The course you have taken in giving our countrymen their content in the point of planting tobacco there for the present (their necessity considered), is not disallowed; but we trust God, other means will be found to employ their time more comfortable and profitable also in the end; and we cannot but generally approve and commend their good resolutions to desist from the planting thereof, whenas they shall discern how to employ their labors otherwise, which we hope they will be speedily induced unto, by such precepts and examples as we shall give them." *

Not only in allowing them to raise tobacco but in other ways did the officials of the Massachusetts Bay Company make concessions and grant privileges to the old planters. At the General Court holden at London, 30th day of April, 1629, by the Governor and Company of the Massachusetts Bay in New England, they passed the following: "To the end that the former planters there may have no occasion of exception, as being excluded out of the privileges of the Company, this Court are content, and do order, by erection of hands, that such of the said former planters as are willing to live within the limits of our Plantation, shall be enabled and are hereby authorized, to make choice of two, such as they shall think fit, to supply and make up the number of twelve of the said Council, one of which twelve is by the Governor and Council or the major part of them to be chosen Deputy to the Governor for the time being."

Felt states that "the letter having ordered that, if Roger Conant and his associates declined being represented in this council, this body might supply its own vacancies, so caused, uses expressions, which denote that a part of the first settlers here considered themselves as injured, by having the colony taken from their immediate control." The language of the original document is as follows: "And that it may appeare as well to all the worlde as to the old planters themselves, that we seke not to make them slaves, as it seems by your letter some of them thinke themselves to bee become by meanes of our patent, wee are content they shall be partakers of such priviledges, as wee, from his Majesty's espetial grace, with great cost, favor of personages of note, and much labor, haue obtained; and that they shalbe incorporated into this Socyetie, and enjoy not only those lands, which formerly they have manured, but such a further proporcon" as the civil authorities think best. "Besides, it is still our purpose, that they should have some benefitt by the common stock, as was by your first commission directed, with this addicon, that if it bee held too much to take 30 per cent. and the fraight of the goods, for and in consideracon of our adventure and disbursement of our moneyes, to bee paid in Bever at 6' per pound., that you moderate the said rate," as equity requires. "Our further order is, that none bee partakers of any of the aforesaid priviledges and proffitts but such as bee peaceable men, and of honest lyfe and conversacon, and desirous to liue amongst vs, and conforme themselves to good order and government."*

In this connection it is well to note that the officials of the Massachusetts Bay Company had in mind these old planters when they sent Governor Endicott and his Company, as Thomas Dudley in his letter to the Countess of Lincoln wrote: "We sent Mr. John Endicott and some with him, to begin a plantation and to strengthen such as he should find there, which we sent thither from Dorchester, and some places adjoining."† We read in the Planter's Plea, that the Endicott Company was sent "to erect a new colony upon the old foundation."

Hubbard states that it was "to carry on the plantation of the Dorchester agents at Naumkeag or Salem, and make way for the settling of another colony in Massachusetts (Charlestown)."

Other disagreements evidently arose between the old planters and the men who came with Governor Endicott, and these were finally settled as Rev. William Hubbard tells in his "Narrative": "The late controversy that had been agitated with too much ^{*}Felt's "Annals," first edition, v. I, p. 77.

"Besides, it is still our purpose, that they should have some benefit by the common stock, as was by your first communicion directed, with this addition, that if it bere held too much to take 30 per cent, and the freight of the goods, for and in consideration of our adventure and dishustement of our moneyers, to hee paid in Bever adventure and dishustement of our moneyers, to hee paid in Bever at 6" per pound, that you moderate the said rate," as equity to the aforesaid priviledges and profitts but such as her pearsable of the aforesaid priviledges and conversacon, and destrous to live men, and of honest lyfe and conversacon, and destrous to live amongst vs, and conforme themselves to good order and government."

In this connection it is well to note that the off-lials of the Massachuseus Bay Company had in mind these old planters when they sent Governor Endicort and his Company, as Thomas Dudley in his letter to the Counters of Lincoln wrine: "We sent Mr. John Endicott and some with-him, to begin a plantation and to strengthen such as he should find there, which we sent thither from Dorchester, and some places adjoining." We read in the Planter's Plea, that the Endicott Company was sent was erect a new colony most the old foundation."

Bubbard states that it was "to carre on the plantation of the Doteliuster agents at Naumleag or Salem, and make way for the settling of another colony in Manachustus (Charlestown)."

Other diagreements cridently grose between the old planters and the men who came with Governor Endicore, and these were finally settles as Rev. William Hubbard tells in his " Narrative":

animosity betwixt the fore mentioned Dorchester planters and their new agent, Mr. Endicott, and his company then sent over, being by the prudent moderation of Mr. Conant, agent before for the Dorchester merchants, quietly composed, that so meum and tuum, that divide the world, should not disturb the peace of good Christians, that came so far to live together in Christian Amity and Concord."

Rev. John White states that when the name was changed from Nahumkeik to Salem, it was done "upon a faire ground, in remembrance of a peace settled upon a conference at a general meeting between them and their neighbors, after expectance of some dangerous jar," a fact related by Thornton as follows: "On the thirtieth day of June 1629, at a general court convened by Governor Endicott, they were by common consent "all combyned together into one body politique under the same Governor," a consummation of the labors of Conant and White entitling them to our everlasting gratitude, and a loftier fame than New England has yet awarded them."

The review of the characters of the two leaders Conant and Endicott, which Judge Wingate Thornton gives us seems so fair and just that I will quote it in full: "Besides strict integrity there was little in common to the characters of Conant and Endicott. Each was peculiarly fitted for the duties and periods assigned to him, and had the order been reversed, the result would have been fatal. Conant was moderate in his views, tolerant, mild, and conciliatory, quiet and unobtrusive, ingenuous and unambitious, preferring the public good to his private interests: with the passive virtues he combined great moral courage and an indomitable will; avoiding difficulty at Plymouth, and without losing their esteem, he quietly withdrew to Nantasket; he was a minister of peace at the time of Hewes' reprisal; he inspired the planters with resolution to remove to Naumkeag, and his integrity of purpose prevented the utter dissolution of the colony there; he was the pacificator in the difficulties between the old and new planters on Endicott's arrival, and then retired animosity betwirt the fore mentioned Dorchester planters and their new agent, Mr. Endicort, and his company then sent over, being by the prudent moderation of Mr. Conant, agent betare for the Dorchester merchants, quietly composed, that so mean and thurn, that divide the world, should not disturb the peace of good Christians, that came so far to live together in Christian Amity and Concord."

Rev. John White states that when the name was changed from Nahomkeik to Salem, it was done "upon a faire ground, in remembrance of a peace sottled upon a conference at a general meeting between them and their neighbors, after expectance of some dangerous jar," a fact related by Thornton as follows: "On the thirrieth day of June 1529, at a general coun convened by Governor Ludicott, they were by common consent "all combyned together into one body politique under the same Governor," a consummation of the labots of Consent and White entire hor," a consummation of the labots of Consent and White entire ling them to our everlassing greaturies and a joiner four than ling them to our everlassing greaturies and a joiner four than New England has yet awarded them."

The review of the characters of the two leaders Consor and Sondicott, which Judge Wingate Thornton gives its seems so fair and just that I will quote it in full: "Besides soiet integrity there was little in common to the characters of Consor and Endicott. Each was precifically fixed for the duties and periods essigned to him, and had the order been reversed, the result would have been fatal. Consor was moderate in his riews, tolerant, mild, and conciliatory, quiet and unobtrusive, ingenuous and unambitious, preferring the public good to his private interests; with the passive virtues he combined good to his private interests; with the passive virtues he combined good mural courage and an indomicable will; avoiding difficulty it liverouth, and without losing their esteem, he quietly withdrew to Nantasker; he was a minister of peace at the time of Hewer reprisal; he he was a minister of peace at the time of Hewer reprisal; he and his integrity of purpose prevented the unter dissolution of the colony there | he was the parificator's arrival, and then retired the old and new planters on Endicott's arrival, and then retired with noble Christian resignation to the privacy and industry of the humblest planter. Governor Conant's true courage and simplicity of heart and strength of principle eminently qualified him for the conflicts of those rude days of peril, deprivation and trial. He was at the head of the forlorn hope; he died victorious, but neglected, and neither monument nor tradition tells of the place where he rests. Endicott was the opposite of Conant, arbitrary and sometimes violent, he ruled with a determined hand and carried the sword unsheathed; quick to assert and ready to maintain his rights; firm and unvielding, he confronted all obstacles with a vigorous resistance; a man of theological asperity and bigoted, he was guarded against every insidious foe; these were the elements necessary to the prosperity, and even the safety of the colony, from the time of Conant's retiracy, crushing insubordination and excluding every hostile element. was chief magistrate for more years than any of his successors."*

One of the objects of this society is to "erect monuments or other memorials to the old planters," and one of the speaker's most cherished wishes is to see a tablet placed by this society upon the site of Roger Conant's house in Salem, the first house erected in the good old town.

"MAYFLOWER" ANCESTRY OF MR. JEREMIAH RICHARDS OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK, THROUGH PHINEAS PRATT.

Degory Priest, twenty-ninth signer of the Mayflower Compact, who "dyed sone after arivall, in the Generall sickness that befell," was the second husband of Sarah (Allerton) Vincent, sister of Isaac Allerton, whom he married 4 Nov., 1611, in Leyden. His widow, Sarah, married a third time, Cuthbert Cuthbertson, alias Godbertson, and came to Plymouth in the "Ann," in 1623.

The colony records have preserved for us a list, dated 22 May, 1627, of Plymouth's inhabitants, divided into groups of thirteen each (showing that fear of the unlucky number was not among their superstitions), and thus we have an accurate census for that date. In this "Division," Lot No. 2 is set to the Allerton family, Godbert Godbertson, Sarah Godbertson, Samuel Godbertson Marra Priest, Sarah Priest, etc., these last two being the daughters of Degory Priest, and his only living children. Joshua and Phineas Pratt were given shares in Lot No. 1.

In 1633, Phineas Pratt, joyner, "in behalf of his wife Marah, is possessed of 30 acres of land," and John Coombs' wife, Sarah, is owner of a like amount, which they dispose of by deed. This same year, 11 Nov., 1633, the General Court appointed Phineas Pratt to "take into his possession" all the goods of Godbertson and his wife "Zarah," and "safely preserve them, according to the Inventory" which had been presented. 3 Aug.

1640, Joshua Pratt and others testified before the court that certain lands which had been originally granted to Godbert Godbertson were given by him to John Combe, gent., and Phineas Pratt, joyner, in marriage with their wives, his daughters; the court accepted this testimony and confirmed the lands to Combe and Pratt, who, two days later, 5 Aug., 1640, sold "all those 2 acres of upland wch. they had of Goodbert Goodbertson in marryage wth. their wives." These records prove that the only children of Degory Priest were Mary, wife of Phineas Pratt, and Sarah, wife of Jno. Combe. It is with one line of descent from Mary Priest that our interest rests.

Phineas Pratt was born in England, about 1590, if the age given on his gravestone is correct. He was one of the ten men who came to New England in the "Sparrow," to select a location for a new settlement. "Sixty lusty men" were to follow and found a colony. The "Sparrow" touched the Maine shore, near Damariscove, in March or April, 1622, and the ten pioneers launched their shallop and explored the coast southward until they reached Wessagusset, now Weymouth, which seemed to them suitable for their purpose. After bargaining for the land, they proceeded to Plymouth, there to await the arrival of the colonists, who came by the "Charity" and "Swan." tlers at Weymouth were speedily in trouble with the Indians, and in March, 1623, we find Phineas Pratt escaping from the fort, eluding the Indians, and fleeing to Plymouth with the news of a threatened attack upon both settlements. Captain Standish and his men went to the rescue of their neighbors, but the Weymouth colony soon after coming to naught, Phineas Pratt took up his abode at Plymouth before 1627, and married Mary Priest, about 1630. 26 Aug., 1646, he sold his house and lands in Plymouth, and, in 1648, purchased of George Bunker, of Charlestown, a house and garden situated "over against the way which goes up to the wind mill hill and the way which goes into elbow lane," "bounded east by the back street wch. goes to the pitt where the beasts drinke." In 1662 he wrote "A Decliration of Togo, Joshua Pratt and others testified before the court that certain lands which had been originally granted to Godbert Godbertson were given by him to John Combe, gant, and Phiness Fratt, Joyner, in marriage with their wives, his daughters; the court accepted this testimony and confirmed the lands to Combe and Pratt, who, two days later, 5 Aug., 1640, sold "all those acress of upland web, they had of Goodbert Goodbertson in marryage with their wives." These records prove that the only children of Degory Pratt, and Children of Degory Pratt, and Sarah, wife of Juo. Combe. It is with one line of descent from Mary Priest that our instent rests.

Oct., 1668, being then "78 years old," he petitions the court for remuneration for his services in the Colony's defence, in which petition he states that he had taken part in Indian fights; "three times we fought with them, thirty miles I was pursued," etc., alluding perhaps to his desperate journey to Plymouth to bring help for the menaced village at Weymouth, in 1623. It does not appear that his case was considered important enough for further grant. His gravestone, in the old burial ground at Charlestown, gives his death on the 19 April, 1680, "aged about 90 years." His will, dated 8 Jan., 1677, pathetically notes that he was "very aged, and crazie of body"; in it are mentioned his wife, Mary, son, Joseph, and the "rest of the children." His widow, Mary, died some nine years later, as in July, 1678, her "goods" are divided.

Aaron Pratt, son of Phineas and Mary, was born in Charlestown, about 1654; removed to that part of Hingham which is now Cohasset, about 1685, and married for his first wife, Sarah Pratt (born in Weymouth 31 May, 1664; died 22 July, 1706, aged 42 years. g. s.), daughter of Joseph, and granddaughter of Matthew Pratt, one of the earliest settlers in Weymouth. COTTON MATHER'S BIRTHPLACE.

KATE M. CONE, Hartford, Vt.

On the twelfth day of February, 1663, on a Thursday, at quarter past ten a. m., Cotton Mather was born in his Grandfather Cotton's house on Cotton Hill overlooking the "famous town with two churches in it" which was the New English Boston of that day. In one of those churches, the North, the baby's father, young Mr. Increase Mather, had preached for a year as a temporary supply, unable to decide between the places numerous "as the signs for the sun in the Zodiac" which opened to his distinguished talents both in Old England and in New. The arrival of his first-born perhaps became a determining influence with him,-"a man who hath a wife and children hath given hostages to fortune,"-for when little Cotton was sixteen months old, Increase Mather was ordained pastor of the Second or North Church in Boston and so settled for life. All the boy's early childish associations were with the house where he was born, where his mother had been born, and where he spent the first seven years of his life. At first we must fancy him, a dark eyed baby over whose cradle black locks and blond blent in fond parental tenderness; or lying on his fair young mother's knees while solemn visaged Grandfather Richard Mather, transported from Dorchester for the purpose, was introduced to his babyship; or coddled by that most model of grandmothers, the "comfortable" Mrs. Sarah Story Cotton Mather, the names of two of whose husbands he bore.

At live, we make there his west both parental tenderness; as tying on the his youth, market's transported by over whose castle his propose, was retroduced to his bath while and to confortable. Whose histories had now model of grandwather, the names of the of whose histories he hadre.

When he was able to sit alone, Grandfather Mather gave him the little oak high-chair, brought over from England, in which he himself and all his children had sat, and which three more generations of Mathers were to use. It is still preserved in the rooms of the American Antiquarian Society at Worcester, a substantial reminder of the childhood of these great men.

The Cotton house was a double house and Increase Mather lived in the north part of it, which was his wife's mother's. They had occupied it not quite two years when Mrs. Mather's brother, Seaborn Cotton, sold the south half of the house, which belonged to him, to John Hull the mint master, and that worthy thereupon came there to live with his wife and one child, Hannah, then a little maid of six or seven. It is easy to fancy how Hannah Hull, carefully reared Puritan only child that she was, must have loved the handsome baby boy next door, as well as the two little sisters who followed him in quick succession. Her gentle hand must often have held his chubby one when he took his first walks in the windy yard, and we may well believe that many a game of childish romps the children of the two households played together, Hannah "pretending" somewhat, Cotton in dead earnest, and little Maria and Elizabeth toddling on behind.

The boy's home training goes far toward explaining his early precocity. He was seldom whipped and never scolded, but was led by the power of love and example into sympathy with the lofty ideals that governed both his parents, and was so good a boy that his father fondly imagined that he had been born sanctified of the Holy Spirit. It was a strange, strenuous life of study and self-discipline that the grave young father lived, not unlike that of some cloistered monk. Reading and writing were in the atmosphere, and unconsciously, as a reflection of the life around him, Cotton learned to pray as early as he learned to speak, and wrote sermons when he was five years old. Between father and son in those early years the foundations were laid of a life-long intimacy and friendship. "Concerning my son Cotton Mather," wrote Increase Mather long after in his will, "He has bin a great comfort to me from his childhood, having bin a very dutiful Son, and a singular Blessing to his Father's family and Flock." The boy's first going to school was from this house, down the road past the graveyard to the grammar school round the corner, kept by Mr. Benjamin Thompson. There, along with the Latin and Greek that came so easy to him, he learned to his sorrow how for off the plane of a pious home is from that of a public school. He composed prayers for his schoolmates and rebuked them for their wicked words and ways, and got laughed at and beaten by them for his pains, at which we are told that his father was "very glad" and "almost proud," though whether it was because of the little minister's display of principle or his bitter but wholesome introduction into the ways of the world, does not appear.

Home at the same time afforded some of the graver lessons of life to the boy. The North Church was behindhand with its pastor's salary and the household was burdened with debt. Grandfather Richard Mather in Dorchester and Uncle Eleazar in Northampton died within three months of each other in the spring and summer of 1669, and the little lad doubtless heard much about warnings and death-bed scenes and family and public afflictions. Talk, too, ran high on public matters, in which, both at home and in England, his father took the deepest interest. Increase Mather was ill and depressed. Many were the days of fasting and prayer which Cotton must have shared, and, in childish fashion, tried to lessen his mother's anxieties, shut out, both of them, from the study where husband and father wrestled alone. Another baby, the delicate Nathaniel, was born early in July and for a time Cotton was deprived even of his mother's cheering presence. We fancy him wandering over Cotton Hill in charge of his two little sisters, serious beyond his years with his burden of domestic responsibilities. All this was near the close of his life on Cotton Hill. In the fall Grandmother Mather came back to "her house in Boston" to live, and Increase Mather removed with his family to North Street. During the years in which Cotton was preparing for college the old place accumulated grandmotherly associations. He must often have stopped there on his way to and from school, and the old fashioned school

On stormy winter days Increase Mather kept his bright boy at home. What more natural than that when he did go, his old home should be his half-way house and his grandmother's fire and candle a pleasant beacon on early dark afternoons? The old lady was lonely. After her active and varied life she had come back to end her days in the house which had been her first home in New England, where her children were born, and her second husband, the great and good John Cotton, had lived and died. Her mind was full of early associations, and into the willing ears of her precocious grandson we fancy her pouring many of the facts and anecdotes about the early worthies of New England which he afterwards brought together in the "Magnalia." The house had been the centre not merely of church interests in the person of Mr. Cotton, but for a time also of affairs of state, for during his brief residence in New England, Governor Vane lived with the Cottons and built the south half of the house for his greater convenience. What a procession of magnates the old dame could summon over that threshold! Surely it was she who supplied Cotton with the details of his grandfather's last illness and of his funeral, "the most grievous and solemn funeral that was ever held perhaps upon the American strand."

Perhaps together they found the Greek verses, written on the leaves of an old almanac, in which John Cotton had expressed and at the same time hidden his grief for the two children who died of smallpox. What a depth of tender recollections this unexpected opening into that long covered well of emotion would bring to light in the old mother's breast! Who but she could know and tell that to the stricken father the loss had seemed like that of Abraham, old like himself when he became a father, and that, nearly beside himself with grief, he at last found comfort in praying for faith like that of Abraham? The "Magnalia" is almost the most affected of human compositions, but touches of nature are at its heart, and beneath its classical quotations and far-fetched allusions we fancy we can trace here and there the outlines of that time honored source of history, the old woman talking of old times.

Meanwhile Cotton Mather's quondam playmate, Mistress Hannah Hull, has been growing to womanhood. An heiress and a girl of sense and many womanly attractions, she has gained her heart's desire in the esteem of Mr. Samuel Sewall, and Madam Mather's experienced eyes detect signs of a wedding next door. Not till after her marriage will Hannah confess that her fate was sealed from the day when she was the guest of President Hoar and his lady at commencement and saw Sir Sewall take his master's degree. He then meant to become a minister. Who can tell by what secret influences and intangible feminine wiles he was transformed in two years' time into John Hull's assistant in business and a member of the Hull household?

Hawthorne's magic pen has described Hannah's wedding. Her husband recorded in his dairy that it took place on a Monday evening, Feb. 28, 1676, in the old hall, so-called, then a very large room (possibly Governor Vane's audience chamber) and Governor Bradstreet performed the ceremony. We like to believe that among the guests was the old lady from the north part of the house, and that by her side stood young Cotton Mather, thirteen years old, clad in the garb of manhood, and fully conscious of his importance as the youngest and brightest boy who had so far been admitted to the college. The occasion imported nothing less to him than a life-long friendship, the making of his childhood's home into a familiar resort for his manhood, and his best chance of being judged kindly by posterity, at the hands of the new master of the house. Madam Mather died the May following the wedding. Two years later, John Hull added her half of the house to his own, to suit the needs of his daughter's increasing family, and the old mansion, its two parts thus united, remained the abode of the Hull-Sewall household during more than half a century. To the end of his days Cotton Mather was a welcome guest there; there he probably ate more good dinners than in any other house in Boston; and there the famous diary was written in which references to him are next in number to the author's self.

A composite picture made from the many glimpses of Cotton Mather contained in Samuel Sewall's dairy would be of a man of strong enthusiasms and emotions, impulsive and hot-tempered, often gravely mistaken, always self-confident, and in the end sorely buffeted by fortune. As unlike as possible to Increase Mather, who walks these pages dark, majestic, and reserved, and equally removed from any resemblance to kindly, cautious, well-to-do Judge Sewall, he was the devoted son of the one and the life-long friend of the other. Herein is testimony to there having been in this much maligned pedant and witch hunter a warmth of heart and sincerity of affection which, lavished on his friends, made the faults of his character both forgivable and forgettable.

Of the many single scenes in which he figures, we are struck with one which has for its time a warm evening in September, 1688, and for place mother's room in the old house, whither he has been summoned to pray with little sick Joseph, the seven weeks old baby of the household. Frequent maternity has made of Hannah Sewall a pale matron, sad with the loss of four infant sons before Joseph. She sits, a figure of sorrow, with her husband and mother beside her and young Sam, Hannah, and Betty in awestruck silence near the door, while Mr. Mather, holding the frail burden in his arms, stands in the candle-lit centre of the chamber's gloom, his face upturned in prayer and his voice tender with memories of his own lost little one.

His first-born and only child has lately died, and in her funeral sermon, dedicated to S. S., he has touchingly portrayed the parent's pang and hope.

We look at him with interest; at the outset of his career, at twenty-five, already for two years his father's colleague, and, in his father's absence in London, at the head of the great North Church; burdened with heavy domestic responsibilities for a delicate girl-wife and his younger brother Nathaniel, slowly dying in Salem; yet on fire with a secret project for some special service for the church of God in those parts. As he prays, the infant, tamous diary was written in which references to him are next in number to the author's self.

As he nears, the orbits

in our fancy, falls asleep, soothed by some magnetic influences in his voice or touch, and wakes to life, for certain it is that Joseph did not die but lived, and long years after, Cotton Mather assisted at his ordination at the First, which was his father's, Church.

Another scene which appeals strongly to the imagination is again on a September day, four years later, when the principal actors in the witchcraft tragedy have met at Cotton house to consult about "publishing some of the Trials of the Witches." The lowering darkness of the approaching equinoctial storm casts a significant gloom over the room in which sit William Stoughton, Esq., John Hathorne, Esq., Mr. Cotton Mather, Capt. John Higginson, and Samuel and Stephen Sewall. Dorcas Hoar was to have died that day for witchcraft, and her confession and consequent reprieve are doubtless subjects of discussion. What we particularly observe, when for a moment we can push aside the spectres and associations of horror which press upon the imagination, is the youth of the minister, not yet thirty and younger by ten years than the youngest of his companions. He has accomplished his special service for the church of God and let loose the whirlwind. Can it be that to Cotton Mather's youthful zeal, which his great father, had he been home, might have known how to curb, is to be attributed the starting of that conflagration which he had no power to stop, and the fixing of his place in popular prejudice as author, promoter, and chief inquisitor of Salem witchcraft? As a matter of fact, he and his associates doubtless sat around Judge Sewall's hospitable fireside in serene unconsciousness of any deserved opprobrium, present or to come, and while, in a painting of the scene, Cotton Mather's handsome face should have all the high lights, neither remorse nor cruelty should be depicted there. That night Judge Sewall thanked God that the drought which had afflicted the land all summer was broken. He might also have been grateful, had he but known it, for the passing of the terrible delusion which had possessed New England so long.

With the old house for a background, hardly an important event in our fancy, fails asleep, soothed by some magnetic influences in his voice or touch, and wakes to life, for certain it is that Joseph did not die but lived, and long years after, Cotton Mather assisted at his ordination at the Fust, which was his father's, Church.

With the old house for a background, buch an impansar even in the Sewalls' domestic drama occurred in which Cotton Mather did not participate. Did hailstones break the window-panes on the east and south, about 480 quarrels, and that while the venerable structure was in the process of enlargement and repair? Cotton Mather was dining with Judge Sewall when it happened and prayed with the family after "this Awfull Providence." Was little Betty Sewall troubled about her sins? it was one of Mr. Mather's sermons, read alone in the cold in her chamber, which brought her to the verge of despair. When Betty was married, Mr. Cotton Mather performed the ceremony in the new parlor. At Joseph Sewall's ordination feast, spread here and at Mr. Pemberton's, Mr. Cotton Mather was an honored guest. by the fireside within these walls, Samuel Sewall read Cotton Mather's printed sermons, his favorites among which he afterwards had bound in "good Calv's leather" as presents to his friends. Here, too, the "Magnalia" was duly welcomed, the tall, leather bound, two volume first edition, printed in London, which must have been so precious in its author's eyes.

In the course of forty years the friendship, though unbreakable, was not without its strains. Cotton Mather in his big, brown, curly periwig, and Samuel Sewall in his black silk skull-cap, must have been a perpetual challenge to each other. Another perennial source of danger was the Dudleys whom the Mathers hated and never lost an opportunity of attacking and about whom Judge Sewall's lips were sealed by his son Sam's marriage to Rebecca Dudley. Once they actually quarrelled over some strictures made by the Court concerning Increase Mather's position at the college, in consequence of which Cotton Mather declared in public that Samuel Sewall had used his father "worse than a Neger."

After fourscore years of existence Cotton house needs to be presented anew to the imagination. We must think of it as grown old, like its inhabitants, in dignities and honors. Still John Cotton's house, it has been added to and cared for as becomes the Sewalls' wealth and station. In 1693-95 the old kitchen was torn down, the little hall moved away, and a large addition built of brick. Neighbors have come to Cotton Hill; it no longer "stands remote from other building and very bleake," and the Boston it looks down upon is a great town of eighteen thousand inhabitants, with seven churches instead of two. Its own immediate surroundings are undiminished, the south garden, the orchard on which one of the house doors opens, the steep green hill behind, and everywhere the trees which Judge Sewall loved to plant. Let us make one more picture of it with the friends, long so intimately connected with it, together in the foreground. choose the garden, where Hannah the grandmother sits in the autumn sunshine, becapped and mittened, her otherwise unwritten history told in her sweet, old face, her gentlewoman's garb and manner, and her pleasure in her flowers. Near her saunter the portly and genial chief justice, and one whose full black eyes and stereotyped smile proclaim him to be Cotton Mather, though time and trouble have almost wholly obliterated his characteristic impetuosity and confidence of demeanor. The tale of his sorrows is almost past belief. He has lost two wives and ten children, of whom his best beloved and eldest daughter, Katherine, has died within the year; the third Mrs. Mather has an infirmity of temper bordering on insanity; and last and severest blow of all, but just now fallen, his darling son, Increase, on whom his brightest hopes were centred, has proved himself a worthless rake. In public, calumny has done its worst against him, and the day of his father's and his own political influence has passed away. An humbled, diminished, and sorely chastened Cotton Mather it is, in need of all the sympathy and cheer his two old friends can give him; yet, under the mellow influences of the day and hour, we fancy him talking of old times with Hannah, and even seeking out the trees and herbs of his grandmother's planting. How many feet have trod those paths! To all three visions arise too intimate for words, of dear ones gone, of moments in their own lives never to be forgotten, of themselves as having reached the time of harvest and of peace, and over all the half-saddening, half-enriching consciousness that moments such as these for them are numbered.

In October, 1717, Hannah died, her husband and Dr. Mather

There followed the anti-climax of Judge Sewall's second and third marriages. Still the old dairist lived on, to drop the curtain also for his friend. On Feb. 13, 1728, is the record, "Dr. Cotton Mather dies." His funeral was on the 19th, the procession going up Hull Street, Judge Sewall following in a coach. Finally, on New Year's morning, 1730, the windows were darkened for the third of the trio, and Cotton house stood open to the associations of another century. It remained, according to some authorities, till 1832, on Tremont Row, on the south corner of the street leading up to Pemberton Square. Its associations with John Cotton, John Hull, and Samuel Sewall are well known, but though Increase Mather declared it in his family Bible, the fact of its having been Cotton Mather's birthplace has been generally passed by. This slight examination into its connection with this most famous of Boston's early worthies, aims at presenting that great man's human side and awakening some slight comprehension of him as a man and a brother.

HOW TO DEAL WITH DIFFICULT QUESTIONS OF PEDIGREE.

There is no royal road in pedigree work. When obvious sources of information have been exhausted, the only way is to collect every detail you can relative to persons of the name and of the period in question.

To do this the more effectually the following suggestions are made:—

Print your crux, accompanied by a bit of tabular pedigree, and cite authorities for your statements.

Or copy it very distinctly upon a sheet of hand-made foolscap. Send to genealogists as many copies as you can, for a well printed, or clearly written, authenticated scrap of pedigree is almost always sure of careful preservation.

Let professional record agents know what you seek, that they may report from time to time any "documents" relating to the family, with which, in their researches amongst the records, they may meet. Order from them abstracts or copies of any likely documents which may be reported, and thus keep the interest of the record agent alive, even if the first question is not greatly elucidated by the information so gathered.

Be very careful as to clear copies and a distinct, intelligible statement of your case. Careless handwriting and the use of wretched paper discount the value of much of the genealogical work done nowadays. If any progress is to be made system and accuracy are essentials.

A ROYAL LINEAGE: ALFRED THE GREAT, 1801-1901. BY Annah Robinson Watson. 8vo., pp. 102, illustrated. Richmond, Va.: Whitney & Shepperson, 1901.

To pick up a well written, well arranged book, devoted to the preservation of one line of ancestry common to many families, and that line leading to such an illustrious man as Alfred the Great, and to find it free from the vulgarity in pedigrees which most books of this character possess, is a pleasure. Mrs. Watson has won recognition in literature aside from her genealogical writings, and she has brought to this genealogical study a charming style which makes the history read as entertainingly as some old romance.

The Reede and Lewis families of Virginia are the two families which the Royal Pedigree most concerns, but to deny kinship to one of those families would be considered heresy by a Virginian. The pedigree appears to be correct, and is based chiefly upon well established historical facts.

Not the least interesting portion is the long list appended of persons claiming descent (with brief pedigree) from King Alfred, though not in the direct line of the Reede connection. There appear many familiar names of both northern and southern origin.

It is worth while to consider the possibility of representing in one's person such a man as King Alfred, and to any one interested in genealogy we recommend the perusal of this book.

1681, 12 Sept., agreement between Jeremiah Neale, Jonathan Hart, and Joseph Neale, reciting that our father John Neale by will gave Jeremiah and Joseph Neale and the deceased wife of Jonathan Hart, land, etc. This is a division. Deeds, 24, 246.

Hart went south in 1682 and left his daughter Sarah in the care of his brothers Neale. On his return in 1685 he was sued for her maintenance as appears more fully below.

Children :-

Sarah, birth not on Salem records. In the Court Files, fo. 18, Vol. for 1685, are the following papers, in case of Joseph Neale vs. Jonathan Hart. Neale sues to recover for supporting Sarah, reputed daughter of said Hart, for the space of three years, from the age of five to eight. Power of attorney of Jonathan Hart, of Salem, bound for the southward and leaving several children and house do appoint my beloved brothers Jeremiah and Joseph Neale, my attorneys, 23 April, 1682. Report of Abraham Cole, Josiah White, Nov., 1685, being desired by Joseph Neale, of Salem, to determine the cost of maintenance of a child about the age of five years, we do adjudge that to our knowledge Joseph Neale has kept Sarah, the reputed daughter of Jonathan Hart, for three years or more, it to be twenty-six pounds in silver.

RICHARD OBER, OF BEVERLY, MASS., AND HIS PARENTAGE.

By Eben Putnam.

Richard Ober was the first of that name in Beverly. According to Beverly records, he was "born at Asbury, Old England." Asbury is a corruption of Abbotsbury, Dorsetshire.

The writer visited that place in 1898. He found the register in very good condition, though lacking some of the first and last pages. Possibly eight pages of baptismal records had suffered. The burial entries from 1637 to 1666 are missing. The second volume of the register dates from 1666.

William Ober and Edith Mollett were married 10 June, 1612. Their children were:—

John, baptized 19 Feb., 1612.
Thomas, " 18 Dec., 1615.
Jeffery, " 6 Dec., 1621.

MANSUR NOTE.

Mr. William T. Dewey, of Montpelier, writes, in relation to the note by the late Judge Taft in our April 188ue:—

"The Protestant Episcopal Society of Christ Church in Montpelier was organized 8 Sept., 1840, and was so reported to the Diocesian Convention during that month by George B. Mansur, a candidate for Holy Orders. He was one of the first vestrymen and was appointed minister 30 Nov., 1842. He was advanced to the priesthood and became rector 7 June, 1843, and resigned in 1848, but returned in Sept., 1848, finally giving up the charge in Oct., 1849. Mr. Mansur was for a long time assistant superintendent of the Congregational Church Sunday School. Mr. Lord entered on the records of that church: 'Including one, for a long time a faithful and efficient co-laborer with us, a superintendent of the Sunday School and the not infrequent lay reader of sermons to the congregation. A gentleman of education and piety, who became the first rector of that church in this village. * * * We take peculiar satisfaction and pleasure in the remembrance that many of the principles and persons which have given to it such animation and efficiency were begotten and mustered under the shadows of these walls." Rev. George B. Mansur, D. D., went from Montpelier to take charge of the church at Bennington. I think he died there, leaving a widow who now lives with their only daughter, Sophia, wife of Rev. With an account of the Bellows Family, of Westboro, Mass.

By THOMAS BELLOWS PECK.

In the sketch of Ezra Bellows in the number of The Genealogical Quarterly for July, 1901, it was said that all attempts to trace his parentage had failed. In pursuing the search during the summer of 1901 the writer was led by a slight clue to visit the town of Westboro, Mass., and there the desired information was obtained. The early records of Westboro, having become badly worn, were carefully copied a number of years since at the expense of the town, and the original church records, kept by Rev. Ebenezer Parkman, are in perfect condition, although so closely written as to be very difficult to search. Mainly from these two sources the following facts in regard to the early history of Ezra Bellows and of the branches of the Bellows family residing in Westboro were obtained.

ITHAMER 3 BELLOWS, son of Deacon John Bellows and grandson of John Bellows, the emigrant, was born in Marlboro, Mass., July 25, 1708. ("Bellows Genealogy," pp. 6 and 600.) He was admitted to the church in Westboro, with his wife, Mary, Aug. 10, 1735.

Their children, born in Westboro, were:-

- I. TIMOTHY, 4 born Jan. 11, 1734-35; died March 6, 1735.
- II. SETH, born April 15, 1736; died May 18, 1736.
- III. MARY, born April 11, 1737; died Feb. 2, 1756.
- IV. BETTY, born Aug. 5, 1739; died March 17, 1756.

Mary, the wife of Ithamer Bellows, died Feb. 14, 1773. The intention of marriage of Ithamer Bellows, of Westboro, and Ruth Johnson, Jn^r, of Southboro, was entered May 23, 1773. Southboro records show that they were married June 15, 1773. Ruth, the wife of Ithamer Bellows, died in Westboro Sept. 29, 1775, and his intention of marriage with Bulah Hemenway, of Southboro, was entered Dec. 16, 1775. By Southboro records they were married Jan. 10, 1776. "Ithamer Bellows ye husband and father of ye above departed this life May ye 27th, 1770." (Westboro Records.)

EZRA 4 BELLOWS (Ithamer, 3 John, 2 John, 1), and Ruth Harrington, both of Westboro, entered their intention of marriage July 4, 1774, and "were joyned in marriage by Rev. Mr. Parkman Dec. 1, 1774." They had two children born in Westboro: Elijah, 5 born Sept. 27, 1775, and Amasa, born Jan. 10, 1777. From these dates it follows that Ezra Bellows's service in the Revolutionary Army occurred before his removal to Lunenburg, where he was admitted to the church with his wife, Ruth, Sept. 6, 1778. By these records the descent of Ezra Bellows in the fourth generation from John Bellows, the emigrant, through Ithamer, of Westboro, and Deacon John, of Southboro, is clearly established.

SIMEON ⁴ Bellows (Ithamer, ³ John, ² John¹), was born in Westboro, Sept. 3, 1744. His intention of marriage with Rebekah Warren, daughter of Daniel Warren, of Westboro, was entered Nov. 23, 1765. They were married April 10, 1766. He died April 29, 1823, and his wife, Rebekah, died Oct. 14, 1822. Simeon Bellows was selectman from 1793 to 1803 and representative in 1812. He was also a Revolutionary soldier, having enlisted as private from Westboro, April 19, 1775.

JONATHANN Brillows (Element, Tales), was born in Markhore, March 27, 1704. He was marked in Longaster, 27, 1732, to Judith Tezer, of Southboro. Jonathan and Judith Bellows were admitted to the church in Westboro June 3, 1736. He spent the rest of his life as a farmer in Westboro, where his children were baptized. The following curious entry is found in the church records: "July 1, 1744. Brother Jonⁿ Bellows offered a Confession of having been Guilty of Negligence in his Business and Dishonesty and Lying in Trading and was restored to Charity." We infer from this record, not that he was more dishonest than his neighbors, but that possibly he had a more sensitive conscience. Worcester Probate Records show that he died in Westboro before Feb. 23, 1759, at which date Judith Bellows, his widow, filed her assent to the appointment of Timothy Warren, her neighbor, as administrator, "she being incapable and her son Amariah, who is of age, declining."

BOOK NOTES.

Authors and publishers are requested to direct books sent for notice, to the Editor, 49 North Prospect St., Burlington, Vermont. The space for a brief notice of any worthy publication is gladly given, as there is no doubt that in this manner many special publications are brought to the attention of purchasers. Publishers are requested to state the price of publication.

THOMAS JOY AND HIS DESCENDANTS. BY JAMES RICHARD Joy, M. A. With a Biographical Sketch of Thomas Joy, Colonist, by Edmund Steele Joy, Ph. D. 8vo. 225 pages. 26 Portraits and Views. $5.00.

The Joy book is a genealogical record of nearly two thousand individuals who are descended from Thomas Joy, an English builder and architect, who settled in Boston about 1636, married Joan, daughter of Captain John and Christabel Gallop, and led an active and successful life in the Bay Colony. The researches of Edmund Steele Joy have brought to light many interesting details of his political and business life, which make this biographical sketch of Thomas Joy, colonist, a substantial contribution to the history of the period.

The author, in his sketch of the distribution of the name in England and Ireland, and of the forms under which it appears, neglects mention of the fact that in County Kilkenny, where the old English element was particularly strong, the name is found spelled both Joy and Joyce, the latter being a truly Irish form. The Kilkenny Joyces are certainly descended from early English settlers, not unlikely one of the Joys of Devonshire. Descendants of this family are found in the United States, and should not be confounded with the more numerous Joyces, members of that once powerful clan who possessed the famous "Joyce country."

All descendants of Thomas and Joan (Gallop) Joy are eligible to the principal colonial ancestral societies ("Colonial Dames," "Colonial Wars," etc.). The pedigrees printed in this volume will enable many individuals to trace their ancestry to soldiers of the Revolution, of whom thirty are here enumerated.

The work, which embodies the results of eight years of labor and a vast correspondence, is handsomely printed. The genealogies are arranged upon a readily understood system.

The edition is limited to four hundred copies, of which three hundred were subscribed for in advance.

Genealogy of the Descendants of John White of Wenham and Lancaster, Mass., 1638-1901. Vol. II., pp. 924. By Myra L. White. $5.00

During the past year we noticed the appearance of this comprehensive genealogy. Miss White has had indefatigable energy and great courage to attempt and carry through so colossal a work, which embraces in its scope all descendants of John White of whatever name. A third volume as large as the two already published will be needed to complete the work. Many illustrations add to the interest of the book, which, typographically and genealogically, leaves nothing to be desired. Subscriptions for the work should be sent to Miss White, 81 Fountain Street, Haverhill, Mass.

The Danforth (Danforth, Danford, Dernford, Etc.,) Genealogy long in preparation by a committee appointed at a meeting of the family, will soon be printed if a sufficient number of subscriptions is obtained to pay the expenses. This very valuable collection of records, sketches, etc., has been edited with impartial care. It treats of the English ancestry from the fifteenth century; of Nicholas, of Cambridge, and his descendants, and of William, of Newbury, and his descendants. It will make a volume of about 400 pages, with half-tone portraits, pictures of places, reproductions of autographs, etc. Price, to subscribers: Cloth, $5.00, half leather, $6.00, post or express free. Address, Chas. H. Pope, Publisher, 221 Columbus Avenue, Boston, Mass.

EARLY RECORDS OF THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, Syracuse, N. Y., 1826-1850. Edited by A. J. Northrup. The Genealogical Society of Central New York, 1902.

This is the first of what it is hoped will prove a numerous series of local publications of the Genealogical Society of Central New York. The beginning of the church records is coincident with the foundation of the church and cover the pastorship of Rev. John W. Adams.

RAMBLES ABOUT GREENLAND, N. H. BY M. O. HALL, 8vo., pp. 238, 1900. Greenland was, perhaps, the name bestowed by Capt. Champernoun himself on his farm at the Great Bay, for the name first appears on Portsmouth records in 1655. It came to be applied to the western portion of Portsmouth, and was adopted by the people of that section when set off as a town.

The greater part of the book is devoted to extracts from the town records, family sketches, and landmarks, and will be found very useful to students of New Hampshire genealogy. There are a number of interesting illustrations selected with good judgment.

HISTORICAL SKETCHES RELATING TO SPENCER, MASS. BY Henry M. Tower, Vol. I., Spencer, Mass., 1901.

A volume which contains odds and ends of history and genealogy, as well as much which would not be omitted from any town history, rolls of soldiers, town officers, and numerous illustrations of the old houses and landmarks, with descriptions thereof. This is the result of Mr. Tower's gleanings, and it all forms an unusually valuable and interesting series of historical and genealogical sketches about Spencer and its people. We note with pleasure that this is the first of several projected volumes.

A considerable portion of the book is devoted to the Bemis family, and to other pioneer families of the town.

A HISTORY OF SCIOTO COUNTY, OHIO, TOGETHER WITH a Pioneer Record of Southern Ohio. By Nelson W. Evans. Portsmouth, Ohio: 1902. Large 8 vo. $10.

This book should serve a useful purpose as the territory of which it treats has been the meeting place of Indian and White and later of the migrating peoples from the East and South.

Scioto County lies at the mouth of the beautiful and fruitful valley of the Scioto River, whose name, given it by the Indians, means "falling water." It has 630 square miles of territory. That part west of the Scioto River is in the Virginia Military District, while the part east is all Congress Land, except Green Township and the southeast corner of Porter, which contains the French Grant, being the lands granted by Congress in 1795 and 1798 to the French settlers of Gallipolis.

The monumental remains of the mound builders cover the valley of the Ohio, east and west of Portsmouth, and their successors, the Shawnee Indians, made the location a point on their great trail from the savannahs of Tennessee to the Lakes. They had a settlement and a town at Oldtown, just northwest of Portsmouth. When white men came, they, like the mound builders and Indians, deemed the mouth of the valley an important point, and proceeded to make settlements, although they selected the west side of the Scioto for their town.

Scioto County was created 24 March, 1803, at the first session of the legislature of the State of Ohio. Its formal organization did not take place until 10 May, 1803, at the house of John Collins, in the town of Alexandria, of which not even a vestige now remains.

Its territory was taken wholly from the county of Adams, and embraced about one third of Pike County and all the western part of Lawrence County.

From the tenth of May, 1803, to the present time, a period of over ninety-eight years, the history of the county has been one of remarkable progress in population, wealth, public and private improvements. The forests have disappeared, the swamps of the Memorial of the Celebration of the Two Hundred and Fiftieth Anniversary of the Incorporation of the Town of Gloucester, Mass., August, 1892. Boston, 1901. 8 vo., pp. 369.

The Gloucester celebration of Aug., 1892, at the time was generally commented upon as remarkable in interest and organization. There was a valuable loan collection on exhibit, and the older houses and historic sites were appropriately marked.

The delay in the publication of the Memorial was due to the illness and death of the editor, Mr. Alfred F. Stickney. The principal contents are the addresses by Rev. D. M. Wilson, at the First Church, and by Rev. J. L. R. Trask, the orator of the day, the list of exhibits in the loan exhibition, and the well selected illustrations. The book is one the town can be proud of—all except the printing, which, however, was done by a Boston concern.

The five parts comprising Volume I. of these collections relating to the Merchanics valley, for the scope of this work is broader than the little indicates, were models for jocal genealogical publications.

One hundred and forty-six of the hundred and sixty pages comprising Parts VI. and VII. are devoted to the church records of Salisbury and Amesbury, thus placing valuable and usually not easily accessible records at the disposal of all interested. Mr. Hoyt has not as yet been reimbursed for the expense of his first volume; his willingness to continue this work should meet with the cordial appreciation of those who are seeking to preserve the memorials of our ancestors from oblivion.

THE MacDonough-Hackstaff Ancestry. By Rodney Macdonough. Boston: 1901. Royal 8vo., pp. 527. Illustrated.

This fine volume is devoted to the record of ancestry of Capt. Charles Shaler McDonough, U. S. N. The arrangement is as follows: the first generation consists of the author with his brothers and sisters; the second generation of their parents; the third generation of their grandparents, and so on. All information obtainable concerning each ancestor is introduced in a biographical sketch, and appended are copies of important and interesting wills, deeds, agreements, or other documents.

The plan is thoroughly worked out, and is one which may be adopted with profit in similar collections.

The families concerning whom the book relates are Adams, Barker, Bigg, Burrowes, Coit, Cole, Denning, Garr, Griggs, Hackstaff, Hallock, Hawxhurst, Hopkins, Laroux, Macdonough, Morrell, Mould, Pratt, Reddocke, Shaler, Sinclair, Spencer, Stocking, Stow, Swazy, Townsend, Vance, Williams.

On the ancestral charts, pp. 477 et seq., appear the names of all ancestors.

The eighth and ninth generations comprise those pioneers from whom descent is derived, and in the accounts there printed will be found material gathered at great pains, not elsewhere accessible in print, which throw much light upon several hitherto difficult problems in New England and Long Island genealogy. An excellent illustration is the printing of proof that John Pratt, of Kingstown, R. I., was son of the sterling adventurer and pioneer, Phineas Pratt. John Pratt has left descendants in Long Island and New Jersey who have the indefatigable research of Mr. Macdonough to thank for this valuable discovery.

So careful has been Mr. Macdonough's examination of original records and printed authorities and correspondence with other genealogists that but little has escaped him which would prove of value. He, however, states that the sum total of our knowledge concerning Gerrard and Michael Spencer is contained in the information supplied by Mr. Waters through the will of Richard Spencer, of London, proved in 1646. Mr. R. P. Spencer has investigated the genealogy of and has extensive notes pertaining to the family, and has proven that Michael Spencer was baptized 5 May, 1611, his brother Gerrard baptized 25 April, 1614; that they were sons of Gerrard baptized 20 May, 1576, who was son of Michael and Elizabeth Spencer.

Mr. Macdonough convicts Sabine of an error in claiming William Hawxhurst as a loyalist. That energetic and far-sighted merchant and iron master, who predicted the Erie Canal, met with financial misfortune before the Revolution. In common with members of the Townsend family, Hawxhurst had extensive landed interests in Vermont. Years after, persons of the name were resident in Colchester, one of the towns of which he was a grantee. Among the New Hampshire grantees of the townships along Lake Champlain were many New Yorkers from Long Island apparently connected by blood ties.

"The MacDonough-Hackstaff Ancestry" is a collection which will prove of the utmost value in determining lines of ancestry originating in or touching Long Island and Rhode Island. It will prove one of the standard reference works in genealogy and especially deserves a place in libraries not aiming to make extensive collections of family genealogies, but which aim to be provided with important works of general utility.

came from Devonshire, England, to America, about 1635. By Henry B. Meigs. Baltimore: 1902.

Vincent Meigs was born in 1583, and settled in Weymouth, Mass., in 1639, having then in his family Vincent, John, and Mark. In 1644, he is found in New Haven, and in 1654 at Guilford, where his son John settled, and died 1 Dec., 1658. The son Vincent died 3 Nov., 1700 without issue. Mark settled on Long Island and died in 1673.

John Meigs has the noble record of having warned and assisted Whalley and Goffe, of the judges who condemned King Charles, saving those men from capture. He left a will dated 1671.

It has been said that Vincent Meigs or Meggs was son of Thomas Meggs, a son of William Meggs, a London draper who died in 1559, and that the family was of the Bradford-Peverell, Dorset family, but investigation shows there is no evidence of such connection.

The book is well gotten up and illustrated with views of gravestones, houses, old documents, and contains sketches of Meigs families not connected with the line of Vincent.

THE REVOLUTIONARY HISTORY OF A VERMONT TOWN.

By KATE MORRIS CONE, of Hartford, Vt.

It is the morning of the 19th day of June, 1775. Let us transport ourselves in fancy to the centre of the town of Hartford in the New Hampshire Grants, whither, in that eventful season, the voting population of the township has been summoned, for the third time within five weeks, to assemble in town meeting at the house of the Widow Ruth Strong. While the good dame and her young daughters are busy with their housework, and fatherless little Ebenezer and baby Ann play near the doorstone, the men of Hartford, by twos and threes, gather in the outdoor premises. If we keep watch with the widow, we shall see Hazens and Gilletts arrive from the north side of White River, Wrights and Pinneos from the east side of Hurricaine, Tildens from the White River Valley, Marshes and Deweys, Burches from Quechee, Udalls and Strongs from Brambles the immediate neighborhood, with Christopher Pease, Bennets, Burgesses, and Chapmans, in all perhaps forty men, representatives of the three hundred inhabitants of the town. Most of them have walked through the green forest on this summer Monday morning, but the more distant ones come on horseback, and four or five sturdy nags and a dog or two exchange civilities in the shade. While waiting for the appointed hour the early comers stand in groups about the yard and barn, talking politics

It is the morning of the right day of June, 1775. Let extransport ourselves in famey to the centre of the town of Hamford in the New Hampshire Grains, whither, in that eventual season, the yeing population, of the cownship has been turn moned, for the third time within fir weeks, to assemble in view moned, for the third time within fir weeks, to assemble in view meeting at the house of the Widow Manh Sirong. and discussing the emergency which has called them together. If we listen near one little knot of talkers and another, we shall learn what so deeply interests everybody, for these active young frontiersmen in homespun, with hardly a gray head among them. the sifted wheat of Connecticut, seem uncommonly in earnest and alive. There is, indeed, great news. With Lexington and Concord just two months old, and Ticonderoga still fresh in every one's mind, war is in the atmosphere, and ready credence is given to Thomas Hazen's assertion that two days before, while the men on the roof of his new house were shingling, they heard the booming of cannon to the southeast. He backs up this story by the testimony of some of Dr. Wheelock's Indian pupils at Hanover, a mile away, who heard a similar sound while lying on the ground on Sunday, the 18th. "Yes," says Stephen Tilden, another citizen whose word cannot be doubted, "and when my boy Asa was hoeing potatoes Saturday afternoon on the hill opposite my home place, he heard a noise like cannon"; to which someone else adds that the Freemans up in Barnard also heard distant cannonading on the 17th, noticing it first when one of them lay down upon the ground to drink from a spring of water. Without doubt a two days' battle has been raging in the wicinity of Boston. Not till a week later will these dwellers in the wilderness know that it was the battle of Bunker Hill, but its echoes are enough to confirm them in their purpose of preparing to do their part in the great struggle which has begun with England.

As he stands in the wide-open door of the barn, we fancy Squire Burch holding forth to a group of sympathetic listeners on the iniquities of New York. He speaks out of a full experience when he puts the tyranny of the king and the meanness of New York officials in the same category. Trouble enough has he had with the New Yorkers over the New Hampshire charter of the town, which, somehow or other, they got away from him and would not give back when he went to New York to petition for letters patent in 1772. These letters patent were to confirm the rights of the inhabitants to the lands which they had received from the governor of New Hampshire, but after three years of waiting they are still not forthcoming and the men of Hartford remain without visible title to the homes which, with so much labor and after ten years of possession, they have carved out of the forest. So far New York sides with the king; two tyrants may be met by one and the same resistance, and Squire Burch recounts with satisfaction the confirmation which the several conventions of the county have given to the recommendations of Congress. At the convention which met at Westminster in February he was a delegate from Hartford and became a member of the committee of correspondence for the county.

Another group discusses the attempt which the New York officials made at concealing the letter which a patriot committee of correspondence in New York City sent in May, 1774, to inquire as to the sentiments of the people in Cumberland County concerning the encroachments of the king. On its discovery, that was done in miniature which took place in other parts of the country; committees of correspondence and of safety, so-called, took immediate control of the political and military situation in their localities, while the courts and judicial machinery remained for some time longer in the hands of representatives of the king. The clash between these two sources of authority was inevitable, and from the loudest spoken circle of all we fancy ourselves listening to an animated rehearsal of the Westminster massacre.

"Talk about the war beginning at Lexington," says some rustic orator as we draw near, "it began right here under our own eyes a whole month before that came off." The statement is greeted by a murmur of assent and before the speaker can resume, another voice, apparently from an eye witness, takes up the story of the 14th of March. Between them the whole scene is brought before us,—the Westminster liberty boys, armed with clubs from the woodpiles, holding the courthouse, the parleys with sheriff and judge at sunset, the midnight attack, the mad fight in the dark in the courthouse, and young William French bleeding to death on the jail floor from his six bullet wounds, jeered at and

With such sentiments in their breasts if not with these exact words on their lips, we imagine the attention of all to be arrested by the clatter of hoofs and the approach of two men on horseback, coming down the hill from the meeting-house square, for Widow Strong lived a few rods below that spot, on the Pomfret post road. We look with the rest, and while both the newcomers seem to be individuals of importance and their arrival to have been expected, one is plainly a nice and precise sort of person, elderly and of slight build,* and the other very tall, very muscular, in weight surely two hundred, and an admirable horseman. They are Amos Robinson, the town clerk and keeper of the ferry at the mouth of White River, and Joseph Marsh, of Quechee, and they bring word of the latest action taken by the central committee of safety at Westminster. Their coming is the signal for the meeting to begin, and Widow Strong's kitchen is presently filled to overflowing with the body politic of Hartford. Joseph Marsh is chosen chairman, Amos Robinson gets out his note-book and inkhorn, and with the kitchen table for a rostrum and desk, they proceed to business. The air, sweet with summer odors, comes in through the open windows on both sides of the room. With the bickerings and misunderstandings and differences of opinion, as common, probably, to such occasions then as now, we fancy it as taking its course, all degrees of patriotism being shown, from timid conservatives, alarmed at the very idea of standing out against the mother country and shaking in their shoes at the possibility of differing from New York, through the indifferent element, against which was directed the vote of the previous meeting "to treat any man with Neglect and Contempt that refuses to pay his proportion" of sending delegates to the county conventions, up to those who see clearly that the time has come for action and that war with Great Britain is the only course. Alexander Brink lived on the Hartland road, where Daniel Simonds afterwards lived. "A Committee of Safety for ye Town" was chosen whose members were Capt. Joseph Marsh, Joel Marsh, Stephen Tilden, Amos Robinson, and Joshua Hazen, named, doubtless, for their ability to serve in that capacity, but also as representing divers quarters of the township, for they came, respectively, from what we know as Quechee, West Hartford, Hartford, White River Junction, and Christian Street. The chain is completed, the links are forged which bind Town No. I., Cumberland County North, to the great system by which liberty is to get strength against tyranny in the new world. With a deep sense of the momentousness of their action and the dangers of the unknown future, the meeting breaks up and its members disperse to their various homes.

Five weeks later the Cumberland County Congress met again at Westminster, and in August the region was divided into military districts, the counties of Charlotte, Cumberland, and Gloucester being embodied in one brigade. Two regiments were formed in Cumberland County, and in the north or upper regiment, Joseph Marsh, of Hartford, was chosen lieutenant-colonel of the regiment, and Joel Marsh, Benjamin Wright, Jr., and Alexander Brink, captain, lieutenant, and ensign of a company. In January, Joseph Marsh was made first colonel of militia, and Amos Robinson, quartermaster, in the so-called upper regiment, while in a regiment of minute men Joel Marsh appears as second major, Abel Marsh taking his place as captain of a company. Hartford had its season of discipline and regulation, carried on, no doubt, like the training days of a later period, on the green at the centre of the town where Capt. Abel Marsh, nicknamed Capt. Snag, and his brother officers, did the best they could at teaching their fellow citizens in arms to march and countermarch, keep step, ground arms, and load and fire. The town historian gives a story from a correspondent (the Hon. Roswell Marsh, a grandson of Joseph Marsh), to the effect that the town "elected a captain, a lieutenant, an ensign, four sergeants, and five corporals, and had one private left, and they drilled him until he lay down all tired out."

That the prospective soldiers in Hartford were skilled in the use of gun and of musket, as hunters, is evinced by the anxiety with which the town watched over the ammunition which was purchased by its committee in Connecticut in the autumn of 1776. A special town meeting was held on July 13th for the regulation of this ammunition. Capt. Abel Marsh had charge of it, and Maj. Joel Marsh, Stephen Tilden, and Samuel Udall were a committee to see that he disposed of it properly. It was to be paid for by an assessment on the inhabitants, which the constables, who were David Wright and Asa Hazen, were to collect. Capt. Marsh was to deal out one pound of powder, with lead and flints proportionable, to each soldier belonging to the town "that is gone or going to Royalton," and half a pound of powder, with flints proportionable, to each man in town that has a gun. And "if any man wastes or any way disposes of any of his ammunition drawn or to be drawn out of the town stock, he shall pay after the rate of two dollars per pound, and shall be held up to public vew as an enemy to his country."* The bears and deer were safe from that powder, if not from private charges.

The reference to Royalton is explained by the proceedings of a meeting held at the college hall at Hanover on July 5th. This meeting signalized, Chase says in his "History of Dartmouth College," "the first genuine panic of the war" in this locality. The northern army, after its unsuccessful campaign in Canada, having retreated from St. Johns, the settlers on the upper Connecticut became painfully aware of their unprotected position, The committees of safety were hastily summoned from the towns about Hanover. Nehemiah Estabrook, of Lebanon, was chosen moderator, and Amos Robinson, of Hartford, clerk, and it was voted to raise fifty men, exclusive of officers, to repair to Royalton to fortify in that town and to scout from there to Onion River and Newbury, a circuit of about sixty miles. Joshua Hazen, of Hartford, was to be first lieutenant, and Joel Marsh was to be one of a committee of three to direct the building of a fort at Royalton and furnish it with all necessary supplies. At the same meeting it was voted to send two hundred and fifty men, exclusive of officers, to Newbury for three months' service. Such were the local efforts at self-defence. Far from the centres of organized hostility and of slight strategic importance in itself, the region was in constant danger from Canada. Only the stout hearts and strong right arms of the inhabitants stood between it and the daily possibility of a deluge from the north. Royalton, as situated at the junction of the first branch of White River with the main stream, and Newbury, as located near the famous Coos meadows, were the points most likely to be attacked. With full appreciation of their position on an otherwise undefended frontier, the men along the old French and Indian highways prepared to defend their firesides from the most dreaded form in which the war could come to them, an Indian invasion. In reckoning up the service which Hartford and its sister towns rendered in the Revolution, this burden of self-defence must be borne in mind as a constant factor. The men did their part in the general activities of the Green Mountain Boys; they also, without outside help, took care of their own homes and kept their space of frontier well guarded from assault.

Meanwhile, political questions of the utmost importance were absorbing everybody's attention in the New Hampshire Grants, in Hartford no less than elsewhere. All through the year 1776 two currents, one toward and the other away from connection with New York, divided men's minds. Public opinion on the west side of the mountain, as voiced by the Dorset conventions, developed rapidly in favor of independence. On the east side there was less clearness of conviction; Hartford, at all events, had voted in November, 1775, to comply with the request of Congress to choose men to represent Cumberland County at the Honorable Provincial Congress at New York. In June, 1776, at Westminster, the conservatives elected three representatives to sit in the New York Congress, and Joseph Marsh, of Hartford, received the largest number of votes. He was not, however, present at the meeting, nor did he accept the nomination, nor did he afterwards, says the town historian, "participate in the proceedings of any Congress, convention, or committee of safety, held in the interest of the government of New York." He had taken his stand in the controversy and by so doing must have dealt a serious blow to the conservatives and given corresponding encouragement to the party of-independence, for he was a man of influence and had been prominent in the affairs of the county from the beginning of the war.

The time came presently when every man had to take his stand and declare himself for or against the question of the hour. Two papers for signature were circulated, one by the Cumberland County committee in favor of New York, and the other, an association of independence, issued by the Dorset convention of September, 1776. We fancy the discussion which these papers of opposite purport must have excited in the villages and hamlets to which they found their way. Paramount in importance with the larger issue of the war was this local question of the birth of a new State. Could it be done? Were there enough people? Would they be strong enough to repel not merely the enemy on the north, but their greedy neighbors on the east and west? What if Congress should disapprove and decline to help them?

These questions and many more must have agitated the counsels of our fathers as they met by the roadside and in the forest paths. or gathered at each other's firesides, or assembled at huskings and raisings any time during that autumn of '76. At last, after a thorough sounding of the popular temper, the Dorset convention, three times adjourned, met at Westminster on the 15th of January, 1777, and in the courthouse, the place where young William French had given his life for liberty twenty-two months before, a free and independent commonwealth came into being, under the name of New Connecticut. On this occasion Hartford was represented by Stephen Tilden who served on a committee to draw a plan for further proceedings after the committee on independence had reported; also on a committee of war for the new State; and on a committee "to draw a letter forbidding the delegates from Cumberland County (those appointed in June, 1776) sitting in the Honorable Provincial Congress of the State of New York."

The declaration of independence of the New Hampshire Grants came into being at the hands of Ira Allen, clerk. "We can take care of ourselves and we will do our duty," is its substance. For simple directness in the claiming of sovereign rights and the assertion of the obligations of liberty it sounds like an echo of Winthrop's "Little Speech" on liberty, and deserves to take its place among the few similar documents which mark the upward progress of mankind.

Town meetings were frequent in Hartford in the winter and spring of 1777, no less than five in as many months. Besides the demands of war and of statecraft, an internal enemy appeared in the shape of small-pox, against which the inhabitants proceeded to take as immediate and vigorous measures as against red-coats and New Yorkers. They called a town meeting by word of mouth,-too much in haste for a regular warning,-and it met at Solomon Strong's, across the road from Widow Ruth's, on the 7th of February, 1777. Col. Joseph Marsh was moderator, and it was voted unanimously not to "admit of the small-pox being set up in this town by any persons." The declaration of independence of the New Hampshire Grants came into being at the hands of Ira Allen, clerk. Wife can take care of ourselves and we will do our dary," is its substance. For simple directness in the claiming of sovereign rights and the assertion of the obligations of liberty it sounds like an exho of Wimbrop's "Little Speech" on liberty, and deserves to take its place among the few similar documents which mark the upward progress of markind.

I own meetings were frequent in Hartford in the winter and spring of 1777, no less than five in as many months. Header the demands of war and no statecraft, an internel enemy appeared in the shape of small-pox, against which the inhalatants proceeded to take as immediate and vigorous measures as against red coats and New Yorkers. They called a town meeting by word of mouth,—too much in haste for a regular warning,—and it met at Solomon Strong's, across the itself from Wildow English on the 7th of February, 1777. Col. Joseph Matsh was medicator, and it was voted unanimously, nor to "admit of the small-pox and it was voted unanimously, nor to "admit of the small-pox hering set up in this town by any persons." It was set up, notwithstanding, and another town meeting had to be held before its progress was arrested. John Udall was the principal offender. He and other sick ones were placed under a guard of twelve men who had had small-pox and he was obliged to give bonds to pay such charges as the town had been to in the matter. If he did not pay, he was to be sent to jail. The preceding summer Hanover, N. H., five miles away, had been similarly troubled. The disease was introduced by soldiers returning from the northern army.

On the first Wednesday in June, 1777, which was June 7th, the adjourned State convention met in the meeting-house at Windsor at nine o'clock in the morning. Seventy-two members were present, among them Stephen Tilden and Joseph and Joel Marsh, of Hartford. The business accomplished was the changing of the name of the new State to Vermont, the assumption of judicial authority, the appointment of a general fast for Sunday, June 18th, and the recommendation that on June 23rd all the towns choose delegates to meet on July 2nd at Windsor to provide the infant commonwealth with a constitution. We suppose the good people of Hartford kept the fast which so nearly celebrated the second anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill and their own taking up of arms, though whether the Rev. Aaron Hutchinson, whose parish included Woodstock and Pomfret as well as Hartford, held a service on that particular Sunday in the last named town, can only be conjectured. If he did, the people gathered in the house of one of the Strongs, as at town meeting, or in Samuel Udall's barn on the edge of Pomfret, or, perhaps, as was sometimes the preacher's custom, under the forest trees with a stump for a pulpit. That they met in town meeting on the 23rd is a matter of record. Col. Joseph Marsh and Lieut. Joshua Hazen were then authorized and empowered to "join with the delegates from the other towns in the state of Vermont to meet in Windsor on the third day of July to Draw the outLines of Government," and it was voted "unanimously that we will join to be a new State on the New Hampshire Grants."

"Of this convention," says E. P. Walton in "Governor and

"Of this convention," says E. P. Walton in "Governor and Council," "unsurpassed in importance by any other in the Statein that it established a constitution and frame of government, no official record and no full and satisfactory account even, has ever been published." It is not known exactly how many members assembled, nor in all cases who the representatives of the towns were. Happily the main purpose and not a few of the attendant circumstances of the occasion are matters of history, while the leaders are well known. We are concerned with the delegates from Hartford. They traveled, of course, on horseback, and, on account of the exigency of the times, not improbably made the fourteen miles journey to Windsor on the morning of Sunday, July 2nd, the day the convention was called. Part and perhaps all of the way they may have had the company of the Rev. Aaron Hutchinson who, we know, rode that day in haste from Pomfret to Windsor to deliver the sermon before the assembly. Col. Marsh was at this time fifty-one years of age. In his dress of Washingtonian pattern, small clothes and triangular hat, well mounted and accoutred, he must have suggested the serene dignity of Washington himself, and not inappropriately, since he was an ardent admirer of Washington, his principles were of the true Washingtonian school, and he trained his children therein. We are told that the only thing which ever disturbed his equable temper were remarks disrespectful to his hero. Side by side with this handsome and stately figure, we would picture the minister, "eccentric in habits and unpolished in manner,"* but embodying in his powerful person and dark face the qualities which made him one of the important factors in the development of the region. Scholar, farmer, preacher, patriot, he knew the English Bible and the Greek Testament by heart, was a Yale A. M., and a champion of orthodoxy, took the only Boston newspaper in his part of the country during the Revolution, and withal could work in shop or field with the best of his parishioners. We fancy him full of sturdy courage on the situation of public affairs in his talk with Col. Marsh, and, if he lapsed now and then into silence, it was to strengthen some point in the sermon which, carried in his head and not in his saddle-bags, he was to present that day before the delegates of the Constitutional Convention. The third in the trio was Joshua Hazen, of whom, younger by twenty years than either of his companions, we conceive as a typical Green Mountain Boy even to the sprig of evergreen in his hatband. He was Thomas Hazen's oldest son, and destined to be the most prominent member of his family in public life at that time; during the Revolution actively engaged in military service, scouting, building forts, ever on the alert against the expected Canadian invasion, and after the war for many years much occupied in town affairs. He rode, perhaps, in silence beside the two older men, his thoughts turning backward to his new house, in process of building near Father Thomas's and brother Asa's, in the northeast corner of Hartford, while mingled with the apprehensions and anxieties which he felt for the public weal were others for his wife, Mercy, and the hoped-for son who might be born before he could return. Col. Marsh and he were destined to make many another journey together on business of the town and State, and their public life was to end the same year, 1796, Joshua Hazen's by death at the age of fifty-one, and Col. Marsh's by retirement at seventy.

Such were the men whom Hartford sent as the peers of the Allens, Thomas Chittenden, Fay, Bowker, and the other fathers of the State who assembled on the first days of July, 1777, in the old Constitution House at Windsor. The dramatic accompaniments of the adopting of the constitution are well known. With Ascutney towering in the background and the majestic Connecticut rolling in front, Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony describes the scene,—the summer day, the grave deliberations in the village meeting-house, the armed messenger of ill tidings galloping his foaming horse into the village street, the consternation of the assembly, the sudden darkness and muttering of the storm, and the passing of the final clauses of the constitution to the crashing of thunder and the rush and roar of the falling rain. We can fancy with what stern thoughts of war the constitution makers hastened home. The second crisis in the war had come, no less for the towns on the upper Connecticut than for those over the mountain, the gravest fears being entertained lest Burgoyne's advancing army should push eastward into the Connecticut Valley, on its way to Boston. Col. Marsh had been appointed chairman of a committee to supply the Statewith arms. We wonder whether, like his Bennington colleague on this committee, he called for all the lead from private sources in the region. At all events he must have had a busy five weeks in the interval before August 16th.

Family traditions say that Joseph Marsh and Josiah Tilden were in the battle of Bennington, but as the express ordering Col. Marsh's regiment to march did not leave Bennington until August 11th, it is impossible that it should have arrived in Hartford in season for him to get his men under way before the day of the battle. The most that can be claimed is that they were en route for Bennington on the 16th, and probably afterwards saw service on the Hudson. The following are the names of the Hartford men who helped to defeat Burgoyne: Asa Emerson, Jonathan Burch, Eddy Burch, Becket Chapman, Mitchell Clark, William Curtis, Barry Damon, Hezekiah Hazen, Jonathan Hill, Abel Marsh, Elisha Perkins, Phineas Strong, Seth Savage, Elkanah Sprague, Stephen Tilden, Andrew Tracy, Josiah Tilden, William Udall, Benjamin Wright. Josiah Tilden was seventeen years old at this time, served seven months and eighteen days, and received a pension for it. His daughter, still living, in 1902, remembers hearing her father often speak of the hurried march in the hot August weather and of the refreshment which certain beans and brown bread afforded him when the company encamped.

Though a watch was kept at Quechee bridge for the capture of Tories, it does not appear that any lived in Hartford, nor that disloyalty came nearer its borders than Hartland, where one tering of the storm, and the passing of the final clauses of the constitution to the crashing of thunder and the rush and roar of the falling rain. Zadock Wright made himself so offensive that his farm was seized and rented to another man, and he himself put under guard by Hartford and Hartland militia. Joseph Marsh, Jr., Andrew Tracy, Stephen Tilden, Jr., and David Wright took charge of him three days and nights, at an expense of £1, 6s each, and young Joseph Marsh helped to escort him to "No. 4."

From 1778 to 1781 Hartford and its neighbors were much occupied in scouting and frontier duty. At last the long expected invasion from Canada took place, in October, 1780, when Royalton was burned. Down White River on the eventful morning of October 16th, rode young Phineas Parkhurst shouting the alarm and holding between his thumb and finger the Indian bullet which had lodged beneath the skin in his side. He galloped past Stephen Tilden's tavern in Hartford, stopping, if at all, only long enough to communicate his news, and hearing, as he pushed onward, the roar of Stephen Tilden's alarm gun, telling the story to the dwellers on the hills. The old gun still exists, a worthy representative of the men and weapons of those days. There was an immediate gathering of the clans. Capt. Joshua Hazen's company marched straightway to Brookfield with the militia of the neighboring towns, three days' service, forty miles travel. Of the pay roll of the Hartford contingent the town historian observes, "It is the only record extant of the names of the citizens of Hartford in 1780, and contains the names of a great majority of the voting portion of the population at that period,"-seventy-eight in all. From it we learn that Thomas Hazen marched with six of his sons, that Lieut .-Gov. Marsh was in the ranks with six also of his name, that there were three Wrights, three Tildens, three Tracys, four Gilletts, four Chapmans, two Peases, David Newton, and John Dutton, the rest being not so familiar. The same month thirteen Hartford men did service for fourteen days at Fort Fortitude in Bethel, and in March, 1781, after the Indian attack on Peacham, Joshua Hazen marched thither with part of his company, turning back when, having gone part way, he learned that the enemy could not be overtaken. All that winter

Zadock Wright made himself so offensive that his farm was seized and rented to another man, and he himself put under guard by Hartford and Harrland militia. Joseph Marsh, Jr., Andrew Tracy, Stephen Tilden, Jr., and David Wright took charge of him three days and nights, at an expense of £3, 6s each, and young Joseph Marsh helped to escort him to "No. 4."

of 1780 and 1781 the inhabitants of the region suffered from fears of Indians and pictured themselves sharing the fate of their neighbors at Royalton. The Wrights in Hartford have preserved a tradition of the wife of Major David fleeing at night with her children and such household effects as they could carry, across the frozen Connecticut to the fort at West Lebanon. There other refugees had gathered, among them Mrs. Phineas Parkhurst, mother of Phineas Parkhurst, greatly agitated, weeping and lamenting "Phineas was wounded, and O dear! and a handkerchief for a bridle, O dear!" A version told in the Strong family represents Mrs. Parkhurst as having escaped from Royalton with her son, and as saying, whenever she told the story in after years, "All the way from Royalton, O dear! without any saddle, O dear! my apron for a bridle, O dear! with Phineas behind me, O dear! and Phineas was wounded, O dear!" Whether Phineas was behind her on the same horse or on another does not appear.

The following story is one told by Mr. A. G. Dewey, of Quechee:—

The old Damon house is still standing on the road from Quechee to Hartland. In it lived a family of that name, probably Barjone Damon, at the time of the burning of Royalton. While the men folks were gone on the three days' pursuit, young Mrs. Damon was left alone with her two little children. In terror for her life lest the Indians, as every one feared, should extend their depredations farther down the valley, she spent each night in a little run of the brook near the house, taking with her her children, her feather bed, and her silver spoons. One day she felt sure she saw traces of a fire which Indians had lighted; but if any passed that way they did no harm. These stories are paralleled by others in the neighboring towns. The Wright gun, which tradition says was captured from an Indian squaw, was carried by Maj. Wright on service in the Revolution. It is in the Hartford Library, as is also the Newton gun, which probably was part of David Newton's equipment at the Royalton pursuit. Another relic of the war is an old road back of Benj.

Wright, Ir.'s house, which Mrs. Sarah Tilden Hazen has heard her father say was begun as a military road to Canada. There were many expeditions to Canada planned. For which one this road was meant or whether it could have had any connection with the famous Hazen road which Gen. Jacob Bayley built from Newbury to Canada, we can only conjecture.

Through its leading citizen, Joseph Marsh, who "for many years carried the town in his pocket,"* Hartford had an important share in the grave questions of policy and self-defence which, in the last years of the war became almost more than the Green Mountain Republic could cope with. Col. Marsh's state offices were many, lieutenant-governor, chairman of the court of confiscations in eastern Vermont, member of the first council of censors, and chief judge in Windsor County from 1787 to 1796, but in local politics, especially in the episode of the Eastern Union, he was equally engaged. Hartford was one of the townships, of which Norwich, Hanover, and Lebanon, were the other three, which formed the nucleus of this Eastern Union, by which, if all plans had matured, a separate State would have been formed under the name of New Connecticut, with its capitol at Dresden -that part of Hanover where Dartmouth College is situatedand its territory that lying between the height of land on both sides of the upper Connecticut. Something more than mere territorial convenience, we must believe, bound these towns together. The four mentioned at the mouth of White River, had been petitioned for at the same time and by the same persons; they had been chartered on the same day, July 4th, 1761; and when they came to be settled, one county, Windham, in Connecticut, furnished them with inhabitants. Another bond was the situation of Dartmouth College in their midst, a piece of fortune which they had obtained over the towns at the mouth of Wells River partly by superior generosity, and partly, we imagine, by old bonds of neighborliness and friendship forged in Connecticut, where Eleazar Wheelock had been pastor of the church to

It is an almost forgotten story except by the curious, involving meetings and discussions innumerable and a vast correspondence with Congress, but in its time the scheme was the question of the hour in its locality.

In another of the difficult and delicate matters of the day, that of the Haldimand correspondence, we have it on the authority of Gov. Marsh's grandson that he was actively concerned. From the nature of the case the exact share which he took in it is difficult to learn. The correspondence was conducted in cipher, secrecy was its prime essential, and Gov. Marsh was by nature reticent, never speaking in after years of the events of his life except to those who had participated in them. Did any of those tempting letters from Canada, in the negotiation by which Vermont was to be freed alike from the humors of Congress and the encroachments of New York, ever find their way to Hartford? Did British officers in disguise ever cross its borders to seek out its great man in his Quechee home? We can only fancy such possibilities. Ethan Allen was the chief actor in the play, and of his fidelity we are told that Joseph Marsh, like many another in and outside the secret, had grave doubts. The game served its purpose. What was really sought was to give just enough encouragement to Great Britain to keep her soldiers off the frontier of the State, at the same time that Congress was held sufficiently in suspense to prevent acquiescence in the demands of New York. It was the critical moment in the history of the State. inson says, "from invasion on the one hand and disruption on the other."

The seven lean years of war were followed in Hartford by a period of prosperity and plenty. During the Revolution the population had steadily increased, in what manner may be judged by David Newton's seven sons and daughters born between 1774 and 1783, and eight little Gilletts who came to swell the census in the same period. Immediately upon the peace the tide of emigration from Connecticut began again, and many a young farmer, freed from military duty and confident of reaping what he sowed, went back to the old home of his family to bring a bride into the new country. On the eve of the struggle, in 1774, Joseph Marsh and Amos Robinson had, at the order of the town, staked out a meeting-house at the exact centre spot of the township. In 1783, Gov. Marsh was chairman of the committee for building it. Its first pastor, the Rev. Thomas Gross, became Gov. Marsh's son-in-law, and Gov. Marsh was a deacon in his church. How the thought of the venerable governor and judge dignifies one's associations with the old meeting-house! One can fancy forgetting the bareness of its walls and the chill of its wintry temperature when he passed the communion plate. He must have looked like Jove in a chariot coming up the hill from Quechee with Dorothy Mason, his wife, by his side, in the chaise which without her he seldom used. He saw to it that his own grandchildren, twenty of whom lived near him, attended dancing school.

In 1797, the year after he had retired from public life, Gov. Marsh built the house later known as the Porter house, at Quechee, "opposite where the Quechee River breaks into little islands." Its doors and windows were brought from Connecticut on rafts. Early writers speak of the house as the "Baronial Mansion." In situation and appearance it was worthy the man who lived in it. There we must think of him as passing the last fourteen years of his life, his children and grandchildren around him, in a dignified and honored old age. It is said that he was offered a township as a reward for his varied and long continued public services, but he refused it. The last picture we have of him is as an old man of eighty-four, walking bareheaded behind his wife's coffin as she was borne, one April day, to her grave in Quechee cemetery.* They had lived together sixty years. Ten months later, on the 9th day of February, 1811, he closed the scene of his earthly career. His wife and he lie in the midst of children and kindred at the east end of Quechee burying ground. Their graves are marked by plain slabs. Gov. Marsh. was the great man of his town in the Revolution, with whom its history in that period is inextricably interwoven. In general its part in the great conflict was not different from that of many other townships in the State, not so famous as some, more notable than others, but sharing with all alike in the sterling worth of the majority of its inhabitants; and the distinction of one leading man. Its citizens have reason to be proud of it, to love it, and to keep its story in remembrance, associating with its hills and rivers, its old houses and graves, its homely and familiar names and localities, the romance and vast significance for liberty which attended the development of the larger body politic of which it was a part.

CHARACTER OF EARLY SETTLERS.

In many respects the first comers into the wilderness of the upper Connecticut resembled the first comers to New England. They were, indeed, in most cases, their direct descendants and brought not merely the same names both of families and towns, but the same institutions, the town meeting, the Congregational Church, the district school, a little college all their own-Dartmouth, and very definite notions as to confederations and representative government. There were no Indians in the region, and after a comparatively brief period of camp and cabin life, frame houses were built, for the most part square, story-and-ahalf structures with ample pitched or gambrel roofs; here and there a two-story mansion of true colonial pattern; and at intervals the hip-roofed taverns familiar all over New England. These early houses were ornamented with paneling and mouldings, with more or less elaborate mantels and staircases, with handsome front doors, decorated window caps, and dental moulding under the roof. Inside, the great families were reared by hard work and close economy, to be sure, yet with generous notions of hospitality and public interests. There was much visiting from one town to another, everybody went to church and spent the day at it, and the affairs of the struggling young State were taken very much to heart. Along with the necessary simplicity of social intercourse not a little dignity was mingled, as part of the character of soldier, statesman, and farmer which so many of the men combined. It would seem to have been Puritan and Pilgrim over again. As the Republic of the Green Mountains was a worthy reincarnation of the principles of the old Charter days, so its defenders had the same qualities, the skill at fighting, at working, and at diplomacy which belonged to the incorporators of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay.

APPENDIX G.

In its simplicity Gov. Marsh's epitaph is in striking contrast to that of Benjamin Carpenter, of Guilford, Vt., though the public services of the two men, as well as their personal characteristics, were remarkably alike.

They were born the same year, were both pillars of the church, and held the same offices in the State as Lieut.-Gov. and members of the first Council of Censors. Both were men of great physical size and strength, both reared large and creditable families, and both lived to an advanced age in full possession of their powers. Benjamin Carpenter's epitaph is given in Thompson's "Gazetteer," and is here appended:—

HENRY THRESHER OF CASCO BAY.

By EBEN PUTNAM, Burlington, Vt.

There was a Christopher Thresher of Taunton in 1643 whose descendants are numerous. Investigation of probate and land records at Taunton for Bristol county fail to show any connection between the Taunton family and Henry of Salem and Maine.

Francis Thresher was a merchant in Milford, Conn., a clothier, and removed to Boston in the latter part of the 17th century. He left a will from which it appears he had no descendants, his property being left to his wife's relatives.

Arthur Thresher of Newbury married there 21 April, 1684, Mary Goodridge and had Dorothy b. 4 Feb., 1692 (Coffin). No further record concerning him appears on Essex probate or land records.

During the latter part of the 18th century and later there was a small family of the name at Marblehead and Beverly, whose origin is unknown. They were mariners.

Boston records furnish the following:

Widow Thrasher taxed in 1692.

Henry Thrasher and family are admitted inhabitants 25 Aug. 1684. Roger Kilcup and Henry Lilly, securities, p. 75, Boston City Doc. No. 150.

Henry Thresher or Thrasher was taxed in Salem I June, 1700. He was in Abel Gardner's ward and paid a poll tax on three "heads." (Salem Town Records, City Clerk's Office.)

Salem records contain no record of births or deaths of the family. The earliest marriage recorded is that of Anna Thrasher 24 Nov., 1763, to Ephraim Glover.

HENRY THRESHER OF CASCO BAY.

By Essay Persons, Curlington Vt.

There was a Christopher Thresher of Taugion in 1643 whose descendants are numerous. Investigation of probare and land records at Taupion for Bristol county fail to show any connection between the Taupion family and Henry of Salem and Maine Francia Threather was a new dank in Allford, Caus. a slothing and removed to Buston in the latter part of the 17th century. He left a will from which it spreams he had no descendants, his property being left to his wife's relatives.

Arthur Thresher of Newbury marries thus 21 April, 1934, Mary Scottings and had Horniny b. 4 Pet., 1852 (Comm.). No luribour concerning him suresure on Breach probate or had records.

During the latter were of the 18th content and later there was a fluring the later.

During the latter pass of the 18th century and later there was a small family of the name at Marbiched and Beyork, whose origin a quincew. They seem markers

Henry Thresher or Thresher was taxed in Salem 1 June, 1700. He was in Abel Gardon's word and paid a poll tax on three "heads," (Salem Town Seconds, City, Clerk's Office.)

Salem records contain no record of births or deaths of the family. The earliest marriage recorded is that of Augustinasher as Nov. 1762, to Ephraim Clever

In 1713 (23 March, 1712-13) Joseph Thresher petitions for ¼ acre land near Town Bridge. (Town Records.)

Henry Thresher settled at Falmouth, Me. There is on record at Salem (Essex Deeds, 35-259) a deposition of Benjamin Wallis, cordwainer, of Beverly, of full age, stating that seventeen years ago he was at Casco Bay with Henry Thresher, and Thresher asked him to go as a witness to neighbor Simon Lovett, as he had bought of Mr. Emerson the land Lovett lived on, to warn Lovett away, which was done. The land lay at Papooduck between lands of John Wallis and Robert Stanford. Thresher died there. 19 March, 1719-20.

Joseph Wallis of Beverly, fisherman, knew Henry Thresher lived on a tract of 100 acres at Falmouth, etc. 19 March, 1719-20. (Essex Deeds, 37-88.)

Joseph Thresher of Salem, son of Henry Thresher, sometime since an inhabitant at Falmouth, deceased, being cut off by the Indians, in behalf of himself and three sisters, claims land at Papooduck at Falmouth, 100 acres, between land of John Wallis and Robert Stanford, on which Henry Thresher lived and was killed by Indians as appears by depositions of Benjamin and Joseph Wallis. 19 March, 1719-20. Reference is made to Essex Deeds given above. See book of Eastern Claims printed in Me. Hist. Gen. Recorder VI 473.

Deposition of James Wallis that he saw Joel Maddifer deliver, about seventeen or eighteen years ago, by turf and twig to Henry Thresher the possession of said 100 acres, which Henry Thresher improved until his death. Dep. taken at Gloucester I Sept., 1719.

The above depositions locate the settlement of Henry Thresher at Casco Bay, in 1702, and immediately following his residence in Salem. His name is not on the tax list of Salem in 1683. It is quite probable that he had been settled at Casco Bay and had retired to Salem for safety, but York Deeds are silent concerning him, as also are early New Hampshire records.

In 1713 (23 March, 1712-13) Joseph Threslier petitions for Marce land near Town Bridge. (Town Records.)

Henry Thresher settled at Falmonth. Mc. There is on record at Salem (Essex Deeds, 35-250) a deposition of Bee jamin Wallis, continuous, of Heverly, of full age, stating that seventeen years ago he was at Casco Bay with Henry Thresher, and Thresher asked, him to go as a witness to neighbor Sin a Loveit, as he had bought of Mr. Ernerson the land Loveit five on, to warn Loveit away, which was done. The land lay at Papeoduck between lands of John Wallis and Robert Stanford Thresher died there.

losoph Wallis of Beverly, fisherman, knew H. or Thresholived on a tract of too series at Eulmouth, etc. 16 March 1710-20 (Ester Decds, 37-88.)

Joseph Hirosher of Salem, son of Henry Thresher, someomic since an inhabitant at Falmouth, deceased, being an off activations, in beind of bimself and three sisters, control land or Falmouth, too acros, between land or falm Watte and Robert Stanford, on which Heary Horsher food and was killed by Indians as appears, by departments at her composite Loseph Wallis. 19 March, 1719-20. Reference is sude to Essex Deeds given above. See book of Eastern Chilic printed in Mic. Hist. Gen. Recorder VI 47.

Deposition of James Walles that he saw Joel Madmirs also lives, about seventers or eighteen passes ago, by tarfaming exact Plency Thresher the possession of said too acres, which Henry Thresher improved until his death. Dep. taken at Concerned to Sept., 1793.

The share depositors locate the section of Honey Threshed at Casco Ray in 1709, and ignochalts), following his residence in Salem. He name is not on the fact list of Salem on 1833. It is quite probable that he had been settled at 2 ave. Lay and had retired to Salem for safety, but York Deyd: are adone you serving him, as also are early New Hampshire recently.

In spite of the frequency of the occurrence of the name on early New England records, the name is not mentioned by Guppy in his exhaustive list of English names and their homes. Nor is it found in Water's Gleanings.

Joseph Thresher, tanner, of Salem, son of Henry Thresher, first appears on record 7 Dec., 1710, when he buys of Nathaniel Whittemore of Salem, tanner, a lease of a dwelling house near the town bridge, for the remainder of a lease for thirty-one years from 29 Feb., 1703-4, the date when the town of Salem leased to Grove Hirst. Deeds, 22-213. On the 21 Sept., 1721 he sold the same lease to Benjamin Boyce of Salem. 41-174.

Joseph Thresher is on record as buying common rights, and also as associated with Samuel Pope, Jr., in a purchase of 30 acres for £500 from John Looms. 50-85. Of this tract his portion was five acres. The land was in the near vicinity of his former lease and in the same ward where in 1700 his father was taxed. This transaction was in 1727. From deeds in 1726 and 1734, the latter the last deed of record, it appears that his wife's name was Mary. 47-211.

Joseph Thresher married Mary daughter of Jonathan Watson of Dover. Between 1734 and 1736 he settled in Hampton, N. H.

28 Sept., 1736, Joseph Thresher and wife Mary, he a tanner, of Hampton, for £37-14-00 sell to their brother Isaac Watson, husbandman, of Dover, their interest in real and personal estate of their father, John Watson, late of Dover, deceased. Rockingham, N. H., Deeds, 92-363.

23 Feb., 1744-5 Joseph Thresher of Hampton Falls sells to his son Benjamin Thresher of Falmouth, co. York, tanner, two acres in Hampton. This deed is witnessed by Jonathan Thresher. Rock. Deeds, 30-217.

In spite of the frequency of the occurrence of the name on early New England records, the name is not mentioned by Guppy in his exhaustive list of English names and their homes. Nor is it found in Water's Gleanings.

Joseph Thresher, tanner, of Salem, son of Henry Thresher, first appears on record 7 Dec. 1710, when he buys of Nathaniel Whittemore of Salem; tanner, a lease of a itwelling house near the town bridge, for the remainder of a lease for thirty-one years from 29 Feb., 1703-4, the date when the town of Salem leased to Grove Hirst. Children of Joseph and Mary Thresher:

Benjamin a tanner of Portland, Me. [List of his descendants desired.]

Jonathan, finally settled in Portland.

Joseph born in Salem, according to Portsmouth records where his marriage is recorded 14 July, 1737, to Hannah Blashfield. See N. E. H. G. Reg. 1872 p. 377.

Henry m. at Hampton Falls, 3 Sept., 1747, Mary Brown, dau. of Jacob Brown. They lived in Thresher's Lane. After 1768 this was in Seabrook. In 1776 he removed to Raymond. See Hist. Hampton Falls, by Warren Brown 1900, page 583.

[Information is sought concerning the sisters of Joseph Thresher, the dates of birth of his children, and the ancestry of his wife, Mary Watson.]

Jonathan Thresher of Boston, sailmaker, makes his wife attorney, 23 Mar., 1738-8. Rock. Deeds, 24-189. Of Newbury, Mass., sailmaker, sells to Jere. Bennett of Hampton Falls, land near the Friends Meeting House, 7 April, 1742. Rock. Deeds, 28-50.

He settled in Portland, and was found dead in his loft the morning of Oct. 25, 1765. Parson Smith's Journal, page 206. According to Willis he was a sailmaker and lived in India St. Willis also says (History of Portland p. 173) that he married Hannah Dow and that they were Quakers from Hampton. His wife Hannah died 23 Feb., 1774, act. 59. He had several children of whom the eldes, Mary, in 1752 married Josiah Tucker.

[Information is desired concerning the family of Jonathan Thresher. It is probable that the Friends Records for New Hampshire and Maine may throw light on this point. Proof is wanted that the parents of his wife Hannah were Jeremiah and Elizabeth (Perkins) Dow. See p. 681, History of Hampton, N. H.]

By Otis G. Hammond, Concord, N. H.

Samuel Dalton was of Hampton, N. H., the son of Philemon and Dorothy Dalton, and was born in 1629. He married Mehitable, daughter of Henry Palmer of Haverhill, Mass., and died Aug. 22, 1681.

These are the primary facts of the life and death of the scribe of an old volume now in the possession of the state of New Hampshire, and deposited in the custody of the secretary of state. From 1775, when the provincial records were removed from Portsmouth for greater safety from the enemy by sea, until 1899 it rested in "ye antient toune" of Exeter, where it was considered as a part of the court records of the province of New Hampshire, and was commonly known as the "Norfolk county book." The legislatures of 1897 and 1899 passed acts asserting the title of the state to all provincial court and other public records prior to the creation of the five original counties by act taking effect March 19, 1771, whereupon the records of the various courts of law, and the land and probate records, were removed from Exeter to the capital.

A recent examination of the old "Norfolk county book," while in search of early probate records, revealed its true nature. It is a Norfolk county book in part, to be sure, for it contains the accounts of Samuel Dalton as treasurer of the county from 1671 to 1678, but that is not all. On reversing the volume we find twenty-six pages of records of a court of justice, and entries are signed by "Samuel Dalton, commissioner," except an occa-

SAMUEL DALTON, CONTILSSIONER

By Cris G. Hanniero, Centerd, N. II.

Samuel Dalton was of Hampton, N. 11., the son of Philemon and Dorothy Dalton, and was been in 1629. He married Mehltable, daughter of Henry Palmer of Haverhill, Mass., and died Aug. 22, 1631.

These are the primary facts or the life and death of the angles of an old volume now in the possession of the state of New Hampshire, and deposited in the custody of the accretary of state. From 1775, when the provincial records were removed from Portsmouth for greater safery from the enough by sea, until 1899 it rested in the anticest found of Exeter, where it was considered as a part of the court records of the province of heav Hampshire, and was commonly known as the environmental country of the title of the state to all provincial rours and other paths the title of the state to all provincial rours and other paths records prior to the creation of the five original counties by act mixing affect March 19, 1771, wherearpon the records of the safet was entire to the creation of the limit and probate records, were the courts of law, and the limit and probate records, were

A recent examination of the old "Norfoll county bonk," while in search of early probate records, revealed its true nature. It is a Norfolk county book in part, to be sure, for it contains the accounts of Samuel Dalton as treasurer of the county from 1671 to 1678, but that is not all. On reversing the volume, are faid treaty-six pages of records of a court of justice, and entries are signed by "Samuel Dalton, commissioner," except an occasive signed by "Samuel Dalton, commissioner," except and commissioner, commissioner, sional instance in the latter part when it occurs as Samuel Dalton, "of ye Council." This is not the county court or court of associates, for appeals are made frequently, from Dalton's decisions to the county court. It is a personal record of one man acting as a magistrate, and considering various petty cases and performing such duties as would now come before a justice of the peace or a police court.

The book also contains two pages of the records of the council, June 29 and 30, 1681, signed by Samuel Dalton, "recorder," and forty-two pages of deeds, also enrolled by Samuel Dalton, "recorder." But what will most interest the reader is the fact that we find, interspersed throughout this record, the marriages performed by Samuel Dalton during his term of service as a magistrate or commissioner. An abstract of these marriage records was made by Hon. Ezra S. Stearns, then secretary of the state of New Hampshire, and was printed in Putnam's "Monthly Historical Magazine," vol. 5, p. 133. They seem to have been little known previous to this publication. They were probably known to the writer of the history of Hampton, as I find in that work all the marriages of Hampton people here recorded, but Gov. Bell certainly did not use them in his history of Exeter, though many Exeter names appear.

One may naturally ask what manner of man was this Samuel Dalton, who appears to us from the obscurity of two hundred and twenty years past. For the last nineteen years of his life, beginning at the early age of thirty-three, he seems to have done little else than hold public office. He apparently inherited this tendency from his father, with the old homestead, for we read in the Massachusetts Bay colonial records, May 14, 1645, "Philemon Dalton hath authority to see people marry at Hampton," and again, June 18, 1645, "Philemon Dalton, at ye request of ye towne of Hampton, is authorized & appointed by this Courte to marrye there such as are dewly published acording to lawe."

Samuel Dalton was a deputy from Hampton to the general court in Boston in 1662, 1664, 1665, 1666, 1669, 1670, 1671, 1673, 1674, 1675, 1676, 1678, and 1679. On his first appearance he was honored with an appointment, for on May 7, 1662, "Upon a motion made in behalfe of the toune of Hampton, Mr.

sional instance in the latter part when it occurs as Samuel Dalton, of ye Council." This is not the county court or court of associates, for appeals are made frequently, from Dalton's decisions to the county court. It is a personal record of one man acting as a magistrate, and considering various petty cases and performing such duties as would now come before a justice of the peace or a police court.

The book also contains two pages of the records of the cannell, June 29 and 30, 1681, signed by Saminel Listian, a recorder, and forty-two pages at deeds, also envolted by Saminel Listian in recorder. But what will most interest the reader is the care that we find, interspersed throughout this record, the mentioner performed by Samuel Dalton during his term or survice as magicular or commissioner. An abstract of these actually magicular or commissioner. An abstract of these actually records was made by Hom. Even S. Stearts, then secretary of the state of Saw Hampshire, and was prosted in Paragraph of the state of Saw Hampshire, and the history of the same probably known to the vertice of the history of transports and probably known to the vertice of the history of transports and find in that work all the matriages of themport again to recorded, but Goy. But destainly all not one than in the Linnage of Exeter, though many lexitor manes appears.

One may naturally set when manner of man was this Somest Datton, who appears to us from the obscurage of two business and twents years past. For the last sinctees years in last the figurining at the north age of the ty-tree, he some or lasts done little give than hold public effect. His father died from his injury June 4, following.

Scattered through the Massachusetts Bay colonial records we find many appointments and reappointments bestowed upon Samuel Dalton. He was named as a commissioner for Norfolk county, with Robert Pike of Salisbury, Mass., May 3, 1665, to hold his office during the pleasure of the general court. The appointment was repeated April 29, 1668, when Capt. Thomas Bradbury was named as his colleague; again, May 15, 1672, and by the same vote he was made an "associate in ye County Courts, as the last yeare"; and again, May 12, 1675, "as the last yeare."

The full text of his first appointment as a commissioner, May 3, 1665, is worthy of reproduction, as it specifies in considerable detail the duties and powers of the office.

"This Court, considering the state of the county of Norfolke as being exposed to great trouble & charge by reason of their remotenes from any magistrate, it is ordered, that Capt. He was appointed an associate in the county court in 1672 ("as the last yeare"), 1674, 1675, 1676, 1677, 1678, and 1679, and was "invested with magistrattical power" in 1669, 1670, 1671, 1673, 1674, 1676, 1677, 1678, and 1679. Each of these appointments was for one year, and his powers as a magistrate were limited to the town of Hampton. This leads one to believe that all the marriages here recorded were performed in that town, though the parties were of varied residence.

By the commission of John Cutt as president, Sept. 18, 1679, New Hampshire was organized as a separate royal province, a council of six members was named by the king, and power was given to the president and council to increase the number to nine. Samuel Dalton was elected Jan. 22, 1679-80, as one of the three necessary to make up the required number.

This seems to have been his last appointment to public office, except that he appears as recorder of that body. He remained in the council until his death, Aug. 22, 1681, and Sept. 6, following, Anthony Nutter, of Dover, was nominated to the king for appointment in his stead.

Had Squire Dalton been spared to a green old age, for he was only fifty-two, doubtless greater honors would have fallen to him, and, perhaps, further light would have been thrown on the history and genealogy of the early settlers of old Norfolk County.

HALL—"The Halls of New England" has the following:—
"Daniel, Jacob, and Elijah Hall, brothers, came to Barnet, Vt.,
March 4, 1770, where they settled. Daniel Hall, married Widow Wright, mother of Dr. Abiathas Wright, and removed to St. Johnsbury, then to Lyndon, and finally to Burke, Vt., where he died. He had been a soldier in the Revolutionary War." Family records state that Daniel Hall married Susannna Cotton, daughter of a minister in Woburn, Mass., who must have been Rev. Josiah Cotton, whose wife was Susanna Salter.
Daniel and Susanna (Cotton) Hall had two children, Susanna, who became the wife of Dr. Abiathas Wright, and Roland. If Daniel Hall married the Widow Wright she must have been his second wife.

Susanna (Cotton) Hall is said to have been buried in Barnet, but date is unknown. Can any one give dates of birth, death, or marriage of any of the foregoing, or any information concerning Roland Hall, son of Daniel and Susanna? F. E. C.

SPARHAWK—Rev. John Sparhawk (H. C. 1689), married at Boston, 22 June, 1699, Elizabeth Poole. He married, second, probably in 1712, Priscilla (——?), who was the mother of his children. She was the widow of Capt. Nathaniel Hayman, a merchant of Charlestown and Bristol, who died before 1711.

The Asia Where can I find an authorizative action in the life and family of Richard Tucker, the founder of Markenia.

Richard Tucker, the first of the name at Carco Bay, according to his own testimony, was aged about sixty or officers. That would make him born in 1608, instead of 1594, as stated in Dr. Bank's article in the "New England Historical Genealogical Register" for January, 1899. He was lost at sea prior to October, 1678, at which time his wife appears as a widow, and she died before 1686. Their estate was very small, the house in which they lived being theirs only for life.

Richard Tucker's career was a changeful one. After his trading partnership at Casco Bay, he traded on his own account. Later he represented Ambrose Lane, and afterward the John Bex Co. (London merchants), having charge of their sawmills at Berwick. After his final settlement, about 1665, at Great Island, he appears to have returned to sea. For details of his life at Casco Bay see Willis's "Portland," the Trelawny Papers, and York Deeds. The later years of his life and his family connections have been more or less unknown to those who have had occasion to allude to him in print.

Publishers are requested to state the price of publication.

FRANK E. COTTON, OF WOBURN, MASS., IS COMPILING A genealogy of the Cotton families. Most of the name come from two or three original settlers. The Rev. John Cotton settled in Boston in 1633; William Cotton in Portsmouth, N. H., before 1650; and Leonard Cotton in Newburyport after 1700, moving to Virginia about 1739. Most of the Cottons in this country seem to have come from these three lines, though there are some others. Most of the Massachusetts and New Hampshire Cottons descend from William of Portsmouth.

In 1895, Mr. Edwin Emery died, leaving the collections of many years relating to Sanford's history in vulnished form. His som, Mr. Wm. M. Enjery undertook the task of completing the work and the present book is a fitting memorial to the father as well as to the generations of Sanford settlers who had preceded him.

Sanford is thirty miles southwest of Postler Land joins Nennebunk and Weils. It is a part of the grant to William Paul lips which was excepted in the transfer of the Georges' interests to Massachusetts, in 1677. In 1676, Major William Phillips granted to nineteen persons, including his children and step-children, a township on the west side of Kennebunk River. Among the grantees were the Sanfords, from whom, in after years, the town took its name. It was not till 1720 that a survey was made of the lands, and it was some years later before settlements were made. As authorized by the Massachusetts government the town was originally known as Phillipstown which name it retained till its incorporation, as Sanford, in 1768.

The author has treated his subject under appropriate headings, describing the civil, military, educational, ecclesiastical, business, and social life of the town.

The chapters on the military and genealogical history will be found of unusual value and interest. Sanford was long a frontier town and in the Colonial and Revolutionary Wars was called upon to do and suffer its part, and one of the features of the book is an index to Revolutionary soldiers. The book was printed at the Salem Press and is well done.

W. C. SHARPE HAS PUBLISHED A THIRD VOLUME OF VITAL statistics of Seymour, Conn., completing the town record to 1901, and giving various church records. Excellent indexes are features of Mr. Sharpe's publications.

GEN. ISRAEL PUTNAM AND THE BATTLE OF BUNKER HILL. By Alfred P. Putnam, D. D. Salem: 1901.

The pamphlet of sixty-five closely printed pages is chiefly a reprint of letters originally published in the Danvers "Mirror."

After reading this critique it is impossible to doubt that Israel Putnam was the actual commander at Bunker Hill, an honor accorded to him by the participants almost without exception. The honor has been claimed for Prescott, who later was deposed by another school of historians in favor of Stark. Putnam, however, was the commander recognized as such by Washington, and by the men who obeyed his orders.

RECORD OF BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS, IN SHARON, Conn., 1821-1879. Taken from the ancient land and church records, and other authentic sources. By Lawrence Van Alstyne.

The compiler of these records has gleaned from the town records, and from the records of the first church in Sharon; he also has used a marriage record of Roswell Hopkins and of Rev. Mr. Knibloe, of Amenia, N. Y., which town adjoins Sharon, and which was a part of the Oblong and also of the territory known as Nine Partners. The "Great Nine Partners Patent" was granted in 1697 to Caleb Heathcote and others, and extended from what was then the Connecticut line, across Dutchess County, N. Y., to the Hudson River, covering very nearly what is now included in the towns of Clinton, Pleasant Valley, Washington, Stanford, Amenia, and the south part of Northeast. The "Little Nine Partners" tract was north of the "Great Nine Partners" land, and corresponded nearly with the towns of Milan, Pine Plains, and the northwest part of Northeast, all in Dutchess County, N. Y. In 1731, Connecticut ceded what was known as the "Oblong" to New York, thus adding a strip one and three quarters miles wide to the towns of Amenia and Northeast. Records in that particular portion of New York and New England have been the cause of much perplexity to searchers, and this book of Sharon and Amenia records will serve · a good end, as heretofore the only printed source of information available has been the "Early History of Amenia," by Newton Reed, which gives some account of the early settlers of the town.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH IN THE DIOCESE OF TENNESSEE. By Rev. Arthur H. Noll. Pages 229, illustrated. New York: 1900.

The author surveys in a most interesting way the establishment of civil and religious authority in Tennessee, and pays just tributes to the loyalty to the church of the men who helped establish it in that State. Bishop Otey was consecrated Bishop of Tennessee in 1833, when there were eight clergymen of his denomination in the State, the first parish having been organized

The predominant sects in the State, as would naturally arise from the migration prior to 1820, are the Presbyterians, Baptists, and Methodists, the two latter having obtained their hold at the time when the people, though generally of Presbyterian antecedents, had so long been without religious supervision and instruction as to render them especially susceptible to revivalist doctrines.

LAWRENCE LITCHFIELD AND HIS DESCENDANTS, PART I. BY W. J. Litchfield. Southbridge, Mass. Price, $1.50.

Lawrence Litchfield settled in Scituate before 1639, and died probably in 1649. His wife was Judith, daughter of William Dennis, who married again 2 Oct., 1649, William Peakes, and died in September or October, 1685. Lawrence Litchfield had Experience, probably born at Barnstable about 1642, died unmarried, 1673; Remember, married Henry Luce, of Martha's Vineyard; Dependence, born at Scituate, 14 Feb., 1646, probably died unmarried; Josiah, born April 3 or 4, 1648, married Sarah Baker by whom he had six children.

The manner in which this genealogy is arranged, and the great amount of historical and genealogical material incorporated, bearing upon the connection which the early Litchfields had with the town and their neighbors, renders it a most valuable contribution to the genealogical literature, and a model for works of a similar character.

LAWRENCE LITCHTIELD AND 102 DESCENDANTS, PART 1. HV-W. J. Luchfield. Southbridge, Mass. Proc. St. co.

Lawrence Litchfield sertled in Scituate before 1639, and died probably in 1640. His wife was Judnit, daughter of William Dennis, who matried again 2 Oct., 1629, William Peakes, and died in September or October, 1685. Lawrence Litchfield had Experience, probably hera at Harnstable about 1642, died unmarried, 1673; Remember, married Henry Luce, of Marcha's Vinceyard; Dependence, been at Scituate, 14 Feb., 1630, probably died unmarried. Joseah, born April 7 or 4, 1648, married Sarah Baker by whom he had see children.

Che Research Publication Co.

Incorporated under the laws of Vermont.

The Research Publication Company is chartered under the laws of the State of Vermont to engage in a publishing, printing, and stationery business, and to conduct archæological, historical and genealogical research.

The company has acquired the Genealogical Quarterly Magazine formerly published by Eben Putnam, and the Vermont Antiquarian, and will continue their publication.

The Genealogical Department of the Company is under the personal supervision of Mr. Eben Putnam who has had many years experience in genealogical and historical research, and whose judgment in regard to the advisability of search and expense may be relied upon. After October 1, Mr. Putnam may be consulted by appointment at the office of the company in Boston.

The Research Publication Co. will undertake the publication of family and town histories, and compilers are requested to correspond with that object in view. If desired suitable editorial assistance will be provided.

A registration bureau is maintained, through which the services of reliable copyists may be obtained. The bureau will also furnish the names and addresses of genealogists who are willing to exchange information. This bureau will also lend special reference works under reasonable restrictions, a feature which will be appreciated by clients not enjoying access to city libraries.

No fee is required for registration: persons who have had experience as record-copyists, and all who desire to exchange genealogical information, are invited to register their addresses.

Shareholders in the company have the privilege of receiving without expense advice regarding genealogical or historical research. The report will be helpful to as fully the extent as the aid which a secretary or librarian of an historical society would be expected to extend to persons consulting them as to ways and means of genealogical research. Shareholders receive The Genealogical Quarterly Magazine, or The Vermont Antiquarian, free, according to choice, and may obtain any publication of the company at a discount equal to that allowed to the trade.

The stock of the Research Publication Company is divided into 200 shares of $25 each, and is absolutely non-assessable.

MANUSCRIPT MAP OF CROWN POINT, OVER 135 YEARS AGO.

By Col. G. G. Benedict, Burlington.

One of the most accurate and comprehensive maps of the old fortress of Crown Point and its environs and outlying fortifications, as they existed within ten years after their erection, ever prepared, is here reproduced. It was discovered by the late Benjamin Franklin Stevens, Esq., at a sale of American maps in London, and with characteristic thoughtfulness was secured by him for the Historical Society of his native State. It measures three feet five inches by two feet five and a half inches. The environs of the fortress are drawn upon a scale of ten chains (220 yards) to an inch; and in one corner of the sheet is a chart of the fortress on a scale of 100 feet to an inch. It bears the following inscription:

"An actual Survey of the Fortress of Crown Point and its environs, presented to Sir Henry Moore, Baronet, Governor of New York, etc., by, Sir, Yr. Excellency's most humble and obedient servant, Adolphus Benzel, Lieut. Royals."

The map bears no date. In a letter from Governor Moore to the Earl of Hillsborough, dated "New York, 16 Dec. 1768," printed in the New York Colonial Manuscripts, vol. vii, he advises the building of a town at Crown Point, and adds: "The plans now offered to your Lordship were drawn by Mr. Adol-

"An actual Survey of the Fortress of Crawn Ponet and its environs, presented to Sir Henry Moore, Baroner, Covernor of New York, etc., by: Sir, Yr. Excellency's more inmulde and obedient servant, Adolphus Benzel, Lieut. Royals."

The map bears no date. In a letter from Covernor Money to the Harl of Hillsborough, dated "New York, 16 Dec 1707."

printed in the New York Colonial Manuscripts, vol. in advises the bailding of a town at Grown Point, and adds. "The plans now aftered to your Lordship were drawn by Mr. Mot phus Benzel, who has been employed as an assistant engineer here during the last war, and no one is better able to give your Lordship an account of that part of the country; for which reason I have desired that he would deliver them himself." A note to this document states that Benzel was a son of Archbishop Benzel, of Upsal, Sweden; that he came to America in 1749, and that in January, 1757 he was "promoted to a firstlieutenantcy in the 2d battalion of the First Foot, or Royals, then serving in America." In 1770 he was appointed "Inspector of His Majesty's woods and forests and unappropriated lands on Lake Champlain and in Canada." The map has upon it a redoubt, referred to on the margin as "Gage's Redoubt," and as Gen. Gage succeeded Amherst in command in August, 1763, it is probable that it was made subsequent to that date, and previous to December, 1768.

It is finely drawn with a pen, with the natural features of rock and woodland, etc., sketched in, and the whole tinted in several tints. It shows some fifteen miles of the lake shore on both sides of the lake. Bulwagga Bay is called "River Head Bay" and the lake is entitled "Lake Champlain or Iroquois." The three outlying fortifications, entitled respectively the "Grenadier Redoubt," "Gage's Redoubt," and the "Light Infantry Redoubt," given on some other maps, appear on this, and in addition there are three block-houses, one at the head of the bay and two on the lake shore south of the fortress. The enlarged plan of the fortress shows the four barracks, two of which have disappeared, and seven smaller structures inside the ramparts. The ramparts show embrasures for 108 guns. Profiles of the bomb-proofs within the ramparts, and enlarged plans of the redoubts, are given on the margin of the map. There are laid down upon it a "Public garden," "Provincials Encampment," storehouses, and a "Market place." Breastworks nearly a mile in extent appear on Chimney Point across the lake from Crown Point. Roads, creeks, elevations, swamps, bluffs, and other natural features are all represented.

An endeavor has been made to compare this map with some of the more important published maps of Crown Point, and especially with the "Plan of the new fort at Crown Point, built by Gen. Amherst," published at Boston in 1762. But no copy of this is to be found in the public libraries of Boston, Cambridge, Albany, or Washington, or in several other large libraries. Of the maps in the valuable collection of maps of Crown Point in the Congressional Library at Washington, no one comprises as many fortifications and features of interest as this manuscript map. It is thus a most important possession. It has been framed and hangs in the rooms of the Vermont Historical Society in the State House at Montpelier.

Labour Egerton of Randolph Vy., Caty Dely, Jan. 16, 1708

An endeavor has been made to compare this map with some of the more important published maps of Crown Point, and especially with the 'Plan of the new fort at Crown Point, built by Gen. Amberst,' published at Boston in 1762. But no copy of this is to be found in the public libraries of Boston, Cambridge, Albany, or Washington, or in several other large libraries. Of the maps in the valuable collection of maps of Crown Point in the Congressional Library at Washington, no one comprises as many fortifications and features of interest as this manuscript map. It is thus a most important possession. It has been framed and hangs in the roome of the Vermont Historical Society in the State House at Montpelier.

EARLIEST RECORDS OF THE UNITARIAN SOCIETY, BURLINGTON, VERMONT.

The First Congregational Society in Burlington, Vermont, was organized in 1810.

With the exception of the following death records, the records of baptisms, marriages, and deaths of the first minister, Rev. Samuel Clark, are lost.

Rev. George Goldthwait Ingersoll, Mr. Clark's successor. seems to have copied the existing record from an older record kept by him, as under date of 1827 he mentions his "first record" (see under Foster). The total number of baptisms performed by Mr. Ingersoll was one hundred and fifty, as follows: 1822, 7; 1823, 4; 1824, 11; 1825, 21; 1826, 12; 1827, 8; 1829, 10; 1830, 8; 1831, 6; 1834, 22; 1835, 3; 1836, 6; 1837, 9; 1838, 6; 1839, 2; 1840, 1; 1841, 2; 1842, 12; 1843, 6; 1844, 1. The lack of entries in 1832 and 1833 is commented upon by Mr. Ingersoll as follows: "The above deficiency was caused in great part by my own sickness, which prevented the discharge of my usual ministerial duties, rendering it necessary that I should be absent on a journey, and afterwards on a voyage to Cuba, and not resuming those duties until the middle of August, 1833." This voyage to Cuba was caused by an "attack of bleeding of the lungs." He left Burlington, I November, 1832. In 1843 he notes: "Having resigned the charge of my pulpit, I was absent from town the remainder of the year," i. e., from the latter part of October. Again, "On the last day of March, 1844, the end of my ministerial term, the pastoral relations between the First Congregational Society and myself ceased, my ill health compelling me to ask a dismission, which was granted."

The baptismal records from 1845 to May, 1849, are in one hand. Among these latter records we note, "Sept. 15, 1850, at Montreal, C. E., Reginald Amerhst, son of Daniel and Elizabeth Fowler, was baptised by me. He was five years old and resided at Amerhst Island, C. W." The baptismal records in the first volume continue through 1859.

JOSHUA REED OF MEDFORD

AND SOME OF HIS DESCENDANTS.

By Howard Redwood Guild.

Joshua Reed⁶ [Daniel, Daniel, Ralph, William, Thomas¹] the subject of this sketch, was the son of Daniel and Mary (Converse) Reed of Woburn, Mass.—born 1734, 18 Nov. at Charlestown. His father Daniel Reed was an innholdersometimes called "husbandman"—born 1700, 1 Oct., Woburn, m. 1722, 27 Dec., Woburn, d. 1757, Woburn. Will [Middlesex Probate No. 13,167] dated 1757, 16 April, proved 1757, 7 Nov. Daniel Reed, of Woburn, Mass., husbandman, wife Mary, executrix: mentions sons Samuel, Daniel, Joshua, James; daughters Mary Evans, Elizabeth Osborn, Esther Hunnewell, Abigail Reed, Ruth Reed, daughter Wyman, son of daughter Sarah, daughter Hannah Richardson's child Hannah, etc. Inventory £373-18-18. 1759, 23 April, James Reed, minor, about 19 years, petitioned court to appoint Ebenezer Converse, of Woburn, his guardian, and Joshua Reed, gentleman, of Medford, became bondsman for Ebenezer Converse [uncle of James and Joshua Reed]. The children of Daniel Reed, were, Sarah 1723, Mary 1725, Susanna 1726, Hannah 1727, Ruth 1729, Samuel 1730, Daniel 1732, Joshua 1734, Elizabeth 1736, Esther 1738, all at Charlestown, and James 1740, Abigail 174—, elsewhere. On his mother's (Sarah Johnson) side, Daniel Reed was descended from Capt. Edward Johnson, author of "Wonder Working Providence," and Lieut. Matthew Johnson. Joshua Reed's mother was Mary Converse⁵ [Robert, 4 James, 3 James, 2 Edward 1] who was born 1702, 17 Feb., Woburn, and died 1786. Her will [Middlesex Probate No. 13,237] dated 1769, 24 Apr., proved 1786, 8 June. She, Mary Reed, widow of Woburn, mentions sons Samuel, Joshua,

"GLORIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

"The anxiety of the public to learn the particulars of the late splendid victory over the British squadron on this Lake, has induced us to publish the following, which are all that have come to our knowledge.

"On Sunday, the ever memorable 11th of September, the enemy's squadron was discovered about eight o'clock, A. M., standing up the lake with a favorable breeze, under a press of sail. Every preparation was made by our gallant Commodore to give them a warm and cordial reception; with his squadron at anchor he awaited their approach. The enemy soon made their appearance off Cumberland Head and bore down for our squadron—the enemy's two largest vessels taking a position to attack the Saratoga, our flag ship. The first broadside from her killed the British Commodore (Downie) and her fire continued so spirited and well directed that the enemy's flag ship, the Confiance, soon after struck. At this time the whole broadside guns of the Saratoga next to the enemy were completely unmanageable. The enemy's brig continued her fire. Our Commodore slipped his cable and

The other grounded on Hospital Island just before the battle ended, and was taken possession of by some of our Gallies. The enemy's Gallies, except two which were sunk, with the assistance of their oars effected their escape. The slaughter on board the British fleet was immense. The Confiance alone had 110 killed and wounded on board the Saratoga—Commodore Macdonough himself was three different times knocked down by the splinters and falling spars and blocks, but has escaped with trifling injury. The loss on either side it is difficult and as yet impossible to ascertain.

"The enemy under Sir George Prevost amounting to 14,000 regulars and embodied militia, in four brigades commanded by Major Generals De Rottenburgh, Powers, Brisbane and Robinson, appeared before our works at Plattsburgh, and after bombarding, cannonading and rocket-firing were obliged to retreat in the night of Sunday last, in great confusion, leaving a number of their tents, several pieces cannon, great quantities of ammunition, bombs, cannon balls, grape shot, fixed cartridges, shovels, spades, axes, pick axes, bread, flour, beef, etc., etc., in our possession, together with all their sick and wounded to our mercy. The gallantry of General Macomb, his subalterns and brave regulars (not exceeding 1,500), have never been exceeded. Not a pallid cheek was seen during the whole affair, notwithstanding the showers of shot, shells and rockets which were directed at our works. On silencing the enemy's battery the second time. Sir George made his escape with his life guard, while we were playing the tune of Yankee Doodle.

"The militia, thirty-two hundred, without distinction of party or age, in every instance have distinguished themselves. The Vermont volunteers have behaved with the coolness of regulars, and their conduct has fulfilled the expectations, which the promptness and spirit with which they turned out had raised.

"The enemy in their flight destroyed all the bridges and obstructed the road by trees, baggage, etc. They were however pursued as far as Chazy, but on account of the obstructions of the road and their precipient retreat, our heroes were not able to overtake them. The enemy have learnt a lesson long to be remembered, that the 'soil of Freedom is sacred, that it must not, shall not, be polluted with impunity.' In this their expedition by land and water, we can account to Sir George for more than two thousand of his men killed and prisoners, and more than nincty pieces of cannon.

"The brave and lamented Captain Downie, in the Confiance, led our small flotilla in battle in a gallant style, and as far as talents, the valor of British tars, and enthusiastic devotion to their country, could command victory, the most successful event was reasonably expected. That noble officer fell in his country's cause, the second shot, but his place was ably filled by his Lieut. who continued the engagement with unabated vigor, and was in the act of laying alongside the largest ship of the enemy, when the rudder of the Confiance was unshipped by a shot from the enemy. The Linnet, a small brig, which with the Confiance, was the only vessel of any size in our flotilla, went ashore; in this state lying like a log on the water, the Confiance maintained the unequal contest with the whole flotilla of the enemy, in which were 4 vessels of large size. History produces nothing superior to the valor and gallantry of the officers and crew of the Confiance; suffice it to say that she was literally fought to the water's edge; and if accounts are true, there remained but thirty of her men unhurt at the end of 5 hours' fighting. Such men will bring down the Americans, as their fathers heretofore have done the Dutch, who without disparagement, were at one time better sailors than our unnatural foe. Would that a veil could be drawn over the scene on shore! but it must afford a sad tale in the page of British history! The scientific, brave Generals, Officers, and soldiers of the Duke of Wellington's army, and the others who have before fought in our cause in the Canadas, did everything which depended on them to support the noble

United States' ship Saratoga, at anchor off Plattsburgh, Sept. 13, 1814.

Sir: By Lieut. Commandant Cassin I have the honor to convev to you the flags of his Brittannic majesty's late squadron, captured on the 11th inst. by the United States' squadron, under my command. Also, my despatches relating to that occurrence, which should have been in your possession at an earlier period, but for the difficulty in arranging the different statements.

The squadron under my command now lies at Plattsburgh -it will bear of considerable diminution, and leave a force sufficient to repel any attempt of the enemy in this quarter. I shall wait your order what to do with the whole or any part thereof, and should it be consistent, I beg you will favor me with permission to leave the lake and place me under command of Commodore Decatur, at New York. My health (being some time on the lake), together with the almost certain inactivity of future naval operations here, are among the causes for this request of my removal.

I have the honor to be, Sir, with much respect, Your most obedient servant, T. MACDONOUGH.

United States' ship Saratoga, Plattsburgh Bay, Sept. 11, 1814.

Sir: I have the honor to give you the particulars of the action which took place on the 11th inst. on this lake.

For several days the enemy were on their way to Plattsburgh, by land and water; and it being understood that an attack would be made at the same time by their land and naval forces, I determined to await at anchor the approach of the latter.

At 8 A. M. the lookout boat announced the approach of the enemy. At 9 he anchored in a line ahead, at about 300 United States' ship Saratoga, at auchor off

United States' slop Forme ga. Plantslingsh fig., Sept. 11, 1814.

Sir: I have the become to give you the paviculate of the sion which took place on the till inst. on this lake.

For several days the enemy were on their way to 12,000 burgh, by land and water; and it being understood that no 45 tack would be made at the same time by their land and naval forces, I determined to await at anchor the appropriate or the latter.

At S A. M. the lookout boat announced the approach of the enemy. At 9 he anchored in a line ahead, at about 200 vards distance from my line; his ship opposed to the Saratoga, his brig to the Eagle, Captain Robert Henley, his galleys, thirteen in number, to the schooner, sloop, and a division of our galleys: one of his sloops assisting their ship and brig, the other assisting their galleys. Our remaining galleys with the Saratoga and Eagle. In this situation, the whole force, on both sides, became engaged: the Saratoga suffering much from the heavy fire of the Confiance. I could perceive at the same time, however, that our fire was very destructive to her. The Ticonderoga, Lieut. Commandant Cassin, gallantly sustained her full share of the action. At half past 10 o'clock, the Eagle, not being able to bring her guns to bear, cut her cable, and anchored in a more eligible position, between my ship and the Ticonderoga, where she very much annoved the enemy, but unfortunately leaving me exposed to a galling fire from the enemy's brig. Our guns on the starboard side being nearly all dismounted, or not manageable, a stern anchor was let go, the bower cable cut, and the ship winded with a fresh broadside on the enemy's ship, which soon after surrendered. Our broadside was then sprung to bear on the brig, which surrendered in about 15 minutes after.

The sloop that was opposed to the Eagle had struck some time before, and drifted down the line; the sloop which was with their galleys having struck also; three of their galleys are said to be sunk, the others pulled off. Our galleys were about obeying, with alacrity, the signal to follow them, when all the vessels were reported to me to be in a sinking state; it then became necessary to annul the signal to the galleys, and order their men to the pumps.

I could only look at the enemy's galleys going off in a shattered condition, for there was not a mast in either squadron that could stand to make sail on; the lower rigging, being nearly all shot away, hung down as though it had been just placed over the mast heads. yards distance from my line; his ship opposed to the Saratoga, his brig to the Eagle, Captain Robert Henley, his galleys, thirteen in number, to the schooner, sloopy and a division of our galleys; one of his sloops assisting their ship and belg, the other assisting their galleys. Our remaining galleys with the Saratoga and Eagle. In this situation, the whole force, on both sides, became engaged; the Saratoga suffering much from the heavy fire of the Confiance. Our lower.

The sloop that was opposed to the Fagle had struck some time before, and drifted down the line; the sloop which was with their gallers having struck also, three of their galleys are said to be sunk, the others pulled off. Our galleys were about obeying, with alacrity, the signal to follow them when all the vossels were reported to the to be in a sinlong state of their because necessary to annul the signal to the galley and order their men to die pumps.

I could only look at the enemy's galleys group off in a shartered condition, for there was not a mast in either equation that could stand to make sail on; the lower rigging, being nearly all shot away, bung down as though it had been just placed over the mast heads. The Saratoga had fifty-five rounds shot in her hull; the Confiance one hundred and five. The enemy's shot passed principally just over our heads, as there were not twenty whole hammocks in the nettings at the close of the action, which lasted, without intermission, two hours and twenty minutes.

The absence and sickness of Lieut, Raymond Perry, left me without the services of that excellent officer; much ought fairly to be attributed to him for his great care and attention in disciplining the ship's crew, as her first lieutenant. His place was filled by a gallant young officer, Lieut. Peter Gamble, who I regret to inform you, was killed early in the action. Acting Lieut. Vallette worked the 1st and 2d divisions of guns with able effect. Sailing Master Brum's attention to the springs, and in the execution of the order to wind the ship, and occasionally at the guns, meets with my entire approbation; also Captain Young's commanding the acting marines, who took his men to the guns. Mr. Beale, purser, was of great service at the guns and in carrying my orders throughout the ship, with Midshipman Montgomery. Master's Mate, Joshua Justin, had the command of the third division: his conduct during the action was that of a brave and correct officer. Midshipmen Monteath, Graham, Williamson, Platt, Thwing, and Acting Midshipman Baldwin, all behaved well, and gave evidence of their making valuable officers.

The Saratoga was twice set on fire by hot shot from the enemy's ship.

I close, sir, this communication with feelings of gratitude for the able support I received from every officer and man attached to the squadron which I have the honor to command.

I have the honor to be,

With great respect, sir,

Your most obedient servant,

T. MACDONOUGH.

Macdonough's Official Report of the American Losses and British Prisoners.

United States' ship Saratoga, September 13, 1814.

Sir: I have the honor to enclose you a list of the killed and wounded on board the different vessels of the squadron under your command in the action of the 11th inst.

It is impossible to ascertain correctly the loss of the enemy. From the best information received from the British officers, from my own observations, and from various lists found on board the Confiance, I calculate the number of men on board of that ship at the commencement of the action, at 270, of whom 180, at least, were killed and wounded; and on board the other captured vessels at least 80 more, making in the whole, killed or wounded, 260. This is doubtless short of the real number, as many were thrown overboard from the Confiance during the engagement.

The muster books must have been thrown overboard, or otherwise disposed of, as they are not to be found.

I am, sir, respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

The Mayflower connnections of the family also form a prominent feature of the book. A few of the marriage alliances are under the names of Converse, French, Gilbert, Hathaway, Morris, Ruggles, Seymour, Shaw, Sherman, and Talbot. There are numerous pictures of places, several of MSS, one portrait, that of Edward Winslow, and several maps. Copies of wills and deeds, gravestone inscriptions, and a transcript of the Mayflower compact further enrich the record. The book is handsomely printed and bound, and is genealogically and historically correct, a labor of love and an excellent example of the outlook on general history of which genealogy is capable. Herein is not merely a record of a single family, but the story of Pilgrim and Puritan, of Loyalist and Patriot, told from a personal and family point of view. K. M. C.

Beginning with No. 1, Vol. IV. (April, 1903), important changes will be made in the publication of The Genealogical Quarterly Magazine, which will hereafter be directed from Boston, the chief centre of genealogical publication and research in the United States.

THE GENEALOGICAL QUARTERLY, as the successor of Putnam's Historical Magazine, now enters upon its thirteenth volume. The magazine has contributed greatly toward the good work of record preservation and making accessible to genealogical students much which otherwise might have remained hidden.

The April issue will contain the first installment of a CALENDAR TO THE WILLS AND ADMINISTRATIONS IN THE MSS. COLLECTIONS OF HENRY F. WATERS, A. M., with abstracts of all unprinted wills and cross references to names occurring in the abstracts.

The value of this important contribution to American genealogy cannot be over-estimated, and is made possible by the efficient co-operation of Mr. Lothrop Withington of London, who has undertaken the task of arranging these notes for the printer and, where necessary, of comparing the manuscript abstracts with the originals.

It is roughly estimated that the Waters collection consists of more than 20,000 abstracts of wills, of which the New England Historic Genealogical Society has been furnished with less than one fifth, lately published in two large octavo volumes under the title of "Genealogical Gleanings in England."

The Calendar will be alphabetically arranged and will indicate where the wills already in print may be found.

The number of references printed in each issue of the Quarterly will to a certain extent depend upon the interest in the proposed publication, as evinced by the number of new subscriptions received. Not less than thirty-two pages are planned for in each issue. Although the alphabetical arrangement will delay the publication of the abstracts falling among the lower letters of the alphabet, the cross references to names occurring therein which will appear in alphabetical order, will serve to guide the searcher directly to original sources, and will render immediately available the gleanings of the most accomplished genealogist of our times.

Hereafter the especial Vermont features will be omitted, the Vermont Antiquarian having been established to care for that department.

Among the features for 1903 will be copies of death and marriage notices from Georgia newspapers from 1765 to 1810, and a similar series to 1800 from the New Hampshire Gazette. A series of illustrated papers on heraldry and upon coat armor borne in New England in colonial times will appear during the year.

The extracts from the land, probate, and court records of Essex and Bristol counties will be continued, also the Harpswell, Maine, genealogies.

Considerable space will also be devoted to gleanings from the colonial archives of Massachusetts, a source as yet so slightly exploited for genealogical material that a few hours' reading of the records never fails to reward the searcher with unexpected and valuable revelations.

A HISTORY OF

THE PUTNAM FAMILY

in England and America

By EBEN PUTNAM.

8vo., cloth, pages lxxiv., 400, 100, (total 574); with more than twenty illustrations, chiefly subjects of interest to the entire family and including many views taken in England, coat of arms, etc. Price, $15.

The history of this distinctively American family extends from its first mention, in connection with the parish of Puttenham, in 1199, to the present day. Part viii. comprises the eighth generation of descendants of John Putnam, the founder of the American line, through his son Thomas. The preceding parts covered the history for seven generations in America of the descendants of his sons Thomas, Nathaniel, and John.

Seventy-four pages are devoted to the history of the family in England from 1200 to 1700, embracing the Putnams of Puttenham, of Penn, and of Sherfield, as well as the minor branches of Eddlesboro, Hawridge, etc.

A copy of this genealogy with all plates as originally issued sold recently for $20: the copies now offered are limited in number, and with the exception of three or four plates are complete.

A few copies lacking many of the plates but with text complete are offered in sheets, unbound, at $10.

As the genealogy is practically complete to the year 1850, as every male descendant of John Putnam of Danvers is eligible to membership in the Society Colonial Wars, and as no other American family can claim a more substantial contribution to the winning of American independence, this collection of genealogical and biographical data has unusual interest. The book is a valuable one for any library, and will soon be out of print.

Libraries are requested to order direct as no discount is made to the trade.

Cake without Flour.

This sounds and looks a little queer, but the cake made without flour is one of the most economical and delicious cakes ever baked. It is simple and easy too. Some of the most expert judges and highest authorities on cooking in America selected this "cake without flour" as the best among hundreds of cake recipes submitted in the first prize contest of Cream of Chocolate. There were several other surprising results of this contest, one being a delicious candy without molasses or sugar. The Prize Recipe Book which we send free to any address tells all about it. Cream of Chocolate is so useful in sickness that no nurse or physician should fail to inform themselves of its merits. It is dainty, wholesome, nourishing and delicious. By the way, Cream of Chocolate is more than a beverage—It is a perfect food. 96 per cent, nutritive matter. Then, too, it is economical and very easy to use. If you send us your name and address, we will mail you the Prize Recipe Book containing over a hundred recipes for dainty and delicious desserts.
